How I Turned $1,000 into a Million

--starting in my spare time

AN AMAZING STORY THAT MAY CHANGE YOUR LIFE

by William Nickerson

PERHAPS the hardest thing about making a million dollars — or even $200,000 — is the act of believing it to be possible. This may be the stumbling block which will keep you from seizing upon the extraordinary opportunity presented here.

Out of every thousand people who read this page, perhaps only 10 will be able to overcome their ingrained skepticism enough to send away for more information. And out of those ten, perhaps only one or two will exploit this opportunity to the hilt. But those fortunate few may enjoy the kind of financial success that millions dream of but only a few achieve.

You can pyramid personal savings of $2,500 ($50 a month, plus interest, for 4 years) into an estate worth $219,972 in 14 years... $1,187,295 in 20 years.

Your chances for success are better than 400 to 1 — in fact, 1600 times better than if you went into business — according to actual U.S. government statistics.

And most, if not all, of your new wealth will be yours to keep tax-free — not even subject to capital gains tax!

I did better than that. When I was 25, my wife Lucille and I started saving part of my first modest earnings as a telephone company employee. In three years we had saved the down payment to buy a home. I began looking about for a way to insure a modest retirement income to supplement my telephone company pension.

From "Scratch" to $500,000 by 42

Starting with only the $1000 cash equity in my home, I pyramided this modest asset into $500,000 by the time I was 42 — all in my spare time. I retired at 42 to concentrate on my investments — with considerable time for gardening, swimming in our backyard pool, hunting, fishing, and traveling.

Many friends turned to me for advice on how they could follow me up the road to fortune. Finally I decided to write a unique guidebook, in which I would share my money-making secrets.

But editors who read my first manuscript told me: "Ah, but your success depended on starting during the depression. It could never happen again!"

Another $500,000 in Only 2 Years

This led me to study other men's money-making experiences, and current, non-depression-period opportunities. Although I had not intended to increase my holdings, I found so many opportunities that in 2 years I doubled my estate to over $1,000,000.

Now my book, HOW I TURNED $1000 INTO A MILLION, is ready at last. And in it I reveal — and tell how to use — these 4 basic principles of traveling the last remaining road to great fortune still open to the average person:

1. How to harness the secret force of free enterprise — the pyramiding power of borrowed money. If you have ever experienced difficulty in arranging a personal loan (or a commercial loan to go into business) you may have the idea that banks won't lend money to the "little fellow" for the purpose of making money. But I will show you how you can get lenders to put up gladly at least three dollars for every one of yours, thereby quadrupling the earning power of your capital.

2. How to choose income-producing multiple dwellings in which to invest your own (and your borrowed) capital. If you are interested in investing in income-producing property for income alone, then you will probably get along all right without any advice from me, although even there I can give you many tips. But if you are out to pyramid your capital, there is a definite set of conditions to look for.

3. How to make your equity grow. A fair market value of an income-producing property is in ratio to its income. Therefore, if you increase the annual net by means of the steps I outline, you increase the market value of the property — thereby increasing your equity.

4. How to virtually eliminate the "tax bite" on your capital growth. I will show you how you can increase your net worth steadily without its being subject to income taxes — not even capital gains tax! J. K. Lasser's famous guide, YOUR INCOME TAX, says of this method that "the mathematics have almost unparalleled attraction."

If you have about $2500 right now — or if you can save only $50 a month for the next four years — you can start out soundly along the road to a million dollars. To enhance your progress you will need an additional personal investment of $50 a month, or $600 a year, for two more years after that, making a total investment from your personal savings of $3600. But then you will start receiving income from your investment. In addition, if you follow my instructions carefully, your capital can grow at the following startling rate:

- In 2 years, your $3600 grows to $5,800.
- In 4 years, you have $11,575.
- In 6 years, $21,681.
- In 8 years, $39,363.
- In 10 years, $70,548.
- In 12 years, $124,884.
- In 14 years, $219,972.
- In 16 years, $386,376.
- In 18 years, $677,583.
- In 20 years, $1,187,195.

How far you want to go up this ladder depends on how much retirement income you would like. You can conservatively expect to earn an average net return of 6% on your personal equity. So, if you would be satisfied with a retirement income of at least $12,000 a year, you might decide to stop when your equity reaches $200,000.

"There Must Be a Catch to It!"

Right now, it would be understandable if you were sputtering, "But — but — it's not that simple. There must be a catch to it!"

Of course there's a catch to it! There are hundreds of "catches" — hundreds of pitfalls and traps for the unwary who have never traveled what I call the "realty road to riches." But I made it, by learning as I went along. And you have a priceless advantage which I never had — the advantage of being able to know beforehand everything I had to learn by trial-and-error.

My 497-page book is literally the product of a lifetime, into which I have poured every distilled ounce of practical knowledge I gained along the road to fortune. It answers all the questions on real estate operations that my friends have ever asked me. I lead you through one actual transaction after another, setting forth each step in detail.

This method of making money is not dependent on continued economic boom or inflation. It is benefited and underwritten by America's continuing population boom, which is expected to result in 77 million more people by 1980. And it is comparatively recession-proof.

own a high-profit second business that runs itself!

Open a Philco-Bendix Self-Service Laundry Store! Many store owners, executives, professional people—businessmen of all kinds—are going into the self-service laundry business. The reasons are obvious. Many of these new-type laundry stores are delivering a 25% return on a small capital investment.

Here are some of the facts: The coin-operated laundry business is one of the fastest-growing businesses in the country. Customers simply come into the store, wash and dry their clothes in metered machines and leave.

Minimum supervision required. A coin-operated laundry needs no attendant. Only a couple of hours a week are required to empty the coin boxes and supervise efficient operation. There are no credit problems—strictly a cash business. Machine repair and daily maintenance can be contracted to local people. An owner can spend full time with his regular business or practice and let the coin store run itself.

Why are they so successful? Philco-Bendix coin-operated laundry stores offer a customer up to 65% saving over attended-type wash-and-dry service. They are convenient for busy people because they remain open 24 hours a day, seven days a week. They give customers a chance to do their own washing—their own way.

Small initial investment. The cost of opening one of these stores equipped with Philco-Bendix Commercial Washers, the only complete line of commercial washers engineered for coin use, is surprisingly low. Only a small initial investment is required. The balance may be financed through Philco Finance Corporation. Return is so rapid that many investors amortize the total cost within a year.

How much do you really know about Diet and Exercise?

ANSWERING THE PUBLIC'S MOST REPEATED QUESTIONS ON FOOD, ENERGY AND VITALITY

What is the relationship between diet, exercise and vitality?

Diet is the amount of minerals, vitamins, protein, carbohydrates and fat consumed each day, in other words, it's the amount of gasoline that goes into the tank. Exercise is the accelerator that helps convert a greater amount of your daily diet into energy than you ordinarily convert while sitting, standing, walking, doing light household, gardening, office, or shop work, or while playing mild games such as golf, bowling, and so on. The conversion of more food and oxygen into energy by exercise is what builds up your vitality.

What constitutes vitality?

Vitality is the vigor you exert when you work, play, lift, heave, haul, run, bend, sing, prance, think, talk or dance. It indicates the measure of your capacity to endure physical stress and strain or emotional shock and pain. Vitality is to the human system what horsepower is to an engine — it rates your power to perform.

What about so-called energy foods?

Foodstuffs, whether in natural or concentrated form, are only a potential source of energy like gasoline is a potential source of power. But food itself is not energy! You cannot eat or drink energy. Energy is the power you exert when your muscles go into action.

What is meant by muscle tone?

The tonus of muscle tissue rates its ability to contract and expand when you want to perform any physical task. The more you exercise your muscles, the stronger, firmer and more flexible they become. This is what is meant by muscle tone. You move, eat, talk and express yourself with the help of muscles. They activate the heart, arteries, capillaries and veins. They manipulate the bones. All body cells depend on muscle power for food, oxygen and the elimination of waste. It's impossible to remain in a top-notch physical condition without good muscle tone.

What constitutes youthfulness?

Youthfulness is a measurement of your physiological age as compared to your calendar age. You either reflect your calendar age, look, feel and act much younger, or you look, feel and act much older. Any healthy adult out of condition can become more youthful by exercising more each day.

What form of exercise is best?

For healthy people, ALL-OUT exercise! This means any sustained activity that exercises most of the major upper and lower body muscles in unison, and at a rapid clip, such as running, vigorous swimming, a fast game of handball or tennis, and so on. ALL-OUT exercise circulates a greater amount of blood, converts a greater amount of food and oxygen into energy, and builds up a greater amount of vitality. ALL-OUT exercise is the fountain from which more youthfulness flows!

How long should All-Out exercise continue?

A healthy person doing sedentary work in the home, office, shop or factory should do ALL-OUT exercise for 30 minutes or longer, each day.

I'm out of condition. How can I do All-Out exercises?

Use an Electric Exercycle so you can do ALL-OUT exercises from the very beginning without having to move your body weight yourself. Otherwise it may be months or years before you can do ALL-OUT exercises. The Electric Exercycle cuts exercising time from hours to minutes. For beginners, it eliminates stress, strain and pain. You can use it at home and at any convenient time. It offers the easiest, safest, cheapest and quickest way to get yourself back into good physical shape.

Do doctors ever recommend the Exercycle?

Oh, yes! In fact, not only have many doctors recommended the Electric Exercycle to their friends and patients, but thousands of doctors have bought an Exercycle for personal use.

Who sells the Exercycle?

The Electric Exercycle is sold by representatives specially trained in the physiology of exercise, capable of answering additional questions on this subject. Mail the coupon below for FREE Exercycle literature.

ON THIS ONE SUNDAY Lenny Baron hit one that went 420 feet, clear over the fence in left center where they say nobody ever hit one before. I'll have to admit that it was a pretty good shot, but in all honesty I got to say too that there was a wind blowing out in that direction. But when everybody was talking about it that night in the drugstore I didn't say anything about the wind because I figured there's no harm in letting them have a good time talking about it.

Then the next Sunday Lenny pulled one on the line over the left field fence. He hit that one pretty good. Soon as he hit it I licked my finger and held it up in the air to see if there was much wind. To tell the honest truth there wasn't much wind at all. Anyway, the ball shot over the left field fence as quick as anything. We wouldn't have known how far it went—it took off over the 350 sign out there and it looked to me like it was beginning to die then but all the other fellows on the bench said no, that she was just beginning to rise going over the fence. I said to them: "It couldn't have gone more than three seventy-five." It was just a liner that's all. Anyway, about a half hour later George, the attendant in Reilly's gas station, came walking in through the gate with a ball in his hand. "This bounced in," he said. Right away Lenny's father jumped up and grabbed George and said: "Show me where it hit, George. Show me the exact spot." You never saw anybody so excited. He took George by the arm and shook him and took the ball and put it in his own pocket. As luck would have it (that Lenny had all the best kinds of luck) Woody was there. Woody was the one who had written the story in the previous week's paper about the 420 clout, mainly I think because he wanted to get on the good side of Mr. Baron, who owns just about everything in town except the clock on top of the post-office.

So Lenny's father and George and Woody the phony and a couple of other men took off, right in the middle of the game. Lenny's father had a tape measure or something in his car and they began by measuring behind the 350 sign and then went across the street with the thing and through the empty lot and under a couple of cars and over a fence and into Reilly's. "That's the spot," George said, pointing to

Abounding in California's Russian River, these fish seem to favor just one fly—but when that fly gets a strike, be ready for battle

IF EVER a state is blessed by nature with an abundance of the things that gladden the heart of a sportsman, that state is California. The California valley quail alone should be enough to elicit daily thanks from the man who goes afield with dog and gun in autumn. The great lowlands were once the wintering grounds of untold millions of ducks and geese, and still draw a big share of all the waterfowl in the Pacific Flyway.

In the Sierra, California has the golden trout, the most beautiful of all our fresh-water fish. She has deer and bear, including grizzly, and two other kinds of quail and two species of grouse. The rainbow trout, now held in such high regard virtually everywhere in the world, came originally from California.

She has two of the greatest steelhead and salmon rivers of the entire Pacific Coast, the Eel and Klamath, and a host of other streams that, while they may once have been as good, somehow never won the reputation of these two.

As though all this were not enough—and I have but touched the surface—California's outdoor attractions have been further heightened by the introduction of various exotic species. Among game birds, there are the Chukar partridge and pheasant, and among fish the black bass, stripers, and shad.

"At various times between 1871 and 1880, 619,000 shad fry were planted in the Sacramento River, and in 1885 and 1886, 910,000 were placed in the Columbia. There young shad found the environment congenial, suitable spawning grounds were found, and they have thrived so well that they have spread to San Diego on the south and Fort Wrangel on the north—a distance of more than 2,000 miles. The shad is now one of the most abundant and most delicious foodfishes in the markets of San Francisco and other West Coast cities." (American Food & Game Fishes, by David Starr Jordan and Barton W. Evermann, copyrighted in 1902.)

Some 50 years later, I met the shad. The meeting was a memorable one, partly, at least, because I was introduced by a mutual friend of the same name. Bill Schaadt (pronounced shad) is the wildest fisherman I know. He lives in Monte Rio, California, on the Russian River, and he is a bachelor. He works barely enough to buy the necessities of life, including tackle, and he fishes the rest of the time.

I went down one year in May to fish with him and another friend, Myron C. Gregory, and before I got home I had fished with many of the fine anglers of the Bay Area, including Howard George, Boots Rogers, Doug and Angie Merrick, Jimmy Green, Carl Ludemann, (Continued on page 44)

Home Again!

Yes, for our Brother Elks whose families and other ties have been severed, admission to the Elks National Home is indeed like coming "home again"; for it has consistently been conducted as a REAL HOME in which each resident Brother has the fullest possible freedom of action, with every consideration for his right of personal privacy, and wherein every effort is made to insure his comfort, health and happiness.

Located in the foothills of the famous Blue Ridge Mountains at Bedford, Virginia, the modern buildings and spacious grounds of the Elks National Home now provide a haven for about 275 resident Brothers from every part of our country. Everything for their comfort and welfare is provided—private rooms with hot and cold running water, good food, excellent medical care, a power laundry, a subordinate lodge, golf, television, recreational facilities and companionship.

Any aged or indigent Elk, in good standing for the preceding five years, who is incapable of earning his living, may apply for admission. Approval of the applicant's home lodge is necessary, as well as reasonable health and other requirements. The cost of maintaining a member at the Home is unbelievably low and many times pension or old age benefits will meet the entire cost of maintenance. The Home has a capacity of about 400 residents. Because of its distinctive facilities, excellent administration and low cost, it should be filled all the time.

The Order is fortunate to have the devoted services of Superintendent Thomas J. Brady to operate the Home under the supervision of the Board of Grand Trustees. Brother Brady is an experienced Elk. He is an excellent administrator and has a great desire for economy and efficiency. Under his administration many new improvements have been made to modernize the physical plant and methods of operation at the Home. All of them have proved beneficial. Just visit the Home and talk with the Brothers living there to get an unsolicited testimonial of their admiration for this compassionate Elk, Superintendent Tom Brady!

It is unfortunate that so many of our members do not know about the Elks National Home. If you have not visited the Home recently or have never visited it, you should take the first opportunity to do so. You will be amazed! But the next best thing to a visit there, is to see the new color motion picture of the Home. It is entitled "Home Again" and may be arranged for by writing the Grand Secretary. It makes a splendid after-lodge entertainment and will make every member more proud that he is an Elk—that he has a part in bringing the opportunity to his brothers to go HOME AGAIN!

Fastest Growing Sport

This year more than 37,000,000 enthusiasts will enjoy the recreation and relaxation of boating

By PHIL REAVIS

Associate Editor, Popular Boating

FOR WHAT IT WAS WORTH TO THEM—fun on the water, fishing, finding peace and relaxation away from business, or just getting wet, some 37,000,000 Americans went pleasure boating last year. And predictions are that even more will participate in the nation's fastest growing sport this year.

Well, it wasn't long ago, little Lake Thingamabub was just a pond where a man could row out and drop his hook almost anywhere and sit back and go to sleep dreaming about giant sunfish. Nowadays, for company he has 100-horsepower outboard rigs fit to cruise a family reunion, and little "punkin-seeds" zooming about like dragon-flies, and fleets of sailboats decorating the water with their bright wings.

"More than 7,000,000 pleasure boats currently in use in the United States!" Those are the statistics. "Builders report they can hardly keep up with new boat orders."

PHOTOGRAPHED AT THE LARCHMONT, N. Y., YACHT CLUB BY MORRIS ROSENFELD

It makes a person wonder. Where did this boating craze come from? Where is it going? What is it, now, a fad, a sport, a way of life? And if a man were inclined to swap his tar-bottomed, slab-sided skiff for one of those planing hulls, or a family cruiser, how would he go about it without biting off more than he could chew and swamping himself and his pocketbook?

First, he might as well assure himself that boating is no fad—it's here to stay. The hundreds of thousands of people who repeatedly "go down to the sea in ships" in such unlikely places as Oklahoma, Arizona and Nevada will never shed a tear over the lost 200 square miles of land under the waters of Lake Texoma, officially known as Denison Reservoir, on the Red River in Texas and Oklahoma; and Lake Mead, 230 square miles of cool water covering once arid desert behind Hoover Dam on the Colorado River. In the Lake Mead National Recreation Area, in Arizona and Nevada, last Labor Day weekend alone, 3,550 boats were counted on Mead and Mohave and over 7,500 persons water-skied on the two artificial lakes—according to an official statement by Charles A. Richey, Park Superintendent. On Lake Texoma, 7,000 pleasure boats are registered for use.

Those folks will never give up the sport of boating. Neither will millions of Americans elsewhere—whether they live near the sea or travel to one of the many lakes and rivers of the country.

On high mountain lakes; on great artificial reservoirs like the 2,300-mile shoreline Kentucky Lake; on wide old rivers—the Ohio, the Missouri, the Mississippi; on narrower streams coursing the varied landscape; on the fresh-water seas of the Great Lakes and the bays and sounds and open water of America's 12,000-mile long seaboard—everywhere—there are (Continued on page 46)

Big Business Moves to Town

Industrial plants are good neighbors—bringing civic improvements for your city, new jobs and business markets for you, better schools for your children

FROM THE SOUTHERN STATE for which it is named, Georgia Power Company has been telling the rest of the country of the attractions of Georgia as a place to do business. As a result of this and allied efforts, backed by many tangible inducements, more than 1,100 new industries have come to settle there. They've brought bags full of money for new construction—$485 million in capital investment. They've created 77,000 new jobs, spreading as many pay envelopes across the state—$240 million a year. They've helped Georgia people to prosper. Georgia Power is a good neighbor.

At Horseheads in northern New York, the local Westinghouse plant helps with fire protection, provides laboratory facilities for the police, and even changed the village accounting system from single to double entry bookkeeping. Mayor Marcus Dilmore says Westinghouse is a good neighbor.

In East Chicago, Indiana, Inland Steel Company sparked a community rehabilitation program which has provided better housing, new parks, an overpass for 13 railroad tracks and an improved water supply. In twenty-two states, American Oil Company fosters a tractor-awards program for 4-H Clubs, instructing farm youth in the maintenance of vital equipment. In New York, Brooklyn Union Gas Company gives free appliance adjustment service to 1,000,000 customers while cutting rates six times in eight years.

These, too, are good neighbors. They are part of a widespread and increasing change in the attitude of big business—and much of little business, also—toward cities and towns where plants are located. It's a new and cheering good neighborliness. Some of it may be pure selfishness. Much of it results from enlightened self-interest. But the most of it—and the best of it—is as one executive put it, "What is good for the community is good for us."

The range of its expression is enormous. A southern company air-drops Christmas toys and candies to residents of nearby cross-roads hamlets. In Florida, a shore-front factory chimney is decorated to resemble a lighthouse. A midwest corporation bulldozes a (Continued on page 40)

CANADA

Places to go and things to do in the four great tourist areas
north of our border

By HORACE SUTTON

THE SNOW should be melted down to ankle depth up in Canada by the time this reaches your mailbox; and by the time you're ready to point the radiator cap northward, things in the real estate up above us ought to be peaceable and pleasant.

For those members of the class who would like a little brush up, Canada splits itself into an Atlantic region, a Central region, a Prairie region and the Mountains. This seems to me to be a little bit too much geography-class, and I would like to define it, or perhaps group it, a little more touristically. In the first place there are the Maritimes, the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and the tiny tract of Prince Edward Island. New Brunswick grows out of the top of Maine which in many ways it resembles. The Province has been very much in the news this year with the success of Dore Schary's Broadway play "Sunrise at Campobello"—which is partly set in the Roosevelt summer home at Campobello Island. But tourists here gather in the great roomy hotel of St. Andrew's by the Sea and watch lobsters and take trips out to Grand Manan Island and play golf and sniff the fine Bay of Fundy air. Between St. John and Moncton is the Fundy National Park which offers bungalow accommodations in the rugged forest terrain. There are campgrounds, too, for those who think they're younger than they are.

Prince Edward Island is a quiet green little nest with rolling fields of clover, small, relatively inexpensive hotels, broad beaches surrounded with warm water, and some handsome golf courses. Nova Scotia is steeped with history, surrounded by the sea and by game fish. At Grand Pre it has bittersweet memories of the Acadians—everybody here remembers Longfellow's "Evangeline"—and at Port Royal it has recollections of the early 17th Century settlers—Champlain and Poutrincourt. Halifax holds three museums loaded to the rafters with relics of Canada's stormy history of battles between the French and the British for the New World. Eight-day tours of Nova Scotia, crossing from Bar Harbor, Maine, to Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, and looking in at Grand Pre, Halifax, Digby Pines and the fishing port of Lunenburg, costs $219, including a three-hour flight back to New York over the New England and New Brunswick coastline. Be sure to make ferry reservations in advance unless you are on such a package tour.

Other packaged tours that take in virtually all of lower Nova Scotia, then cross over to Cape Breton Island, begin at $249 per person. They leave New York on Sunday and return on Sunday. Bus tours out of New York covering all three Maritime Provinces by way of Bar Harbor require two weeks and cost $205, including two full days at Digby Pines, a famous resort hotel in Nova Scotia, owned by Canadian Pacific. For anybody just putting in at Digby independently of a tour, rooms run from $15 to $17 a day per person, and cottages, of which there are thirty-one, begin at $38. Golf, tennis and swimming in the open-air, heated, glass enclosed pool are all available, and the place is hay-fever free.

New door to the Maritimes is the immense province of Quebec, still holding to its French ways, which makes it, of course, that much more interesting for the traveler. Montreal, so near the United States, prints its signs in French and in English, and in summer there are notices on the buses that say, "Baseball Ce Soir." Part of Quebec, a long thin slice which borders the top of New England and New Brunswick, lies on the near side of the St. Lawrence. For the traveler this sliver includes the Gaspé which is a seacoast reminiscent of Brittany on the Coast of France. The St. Lawrence itself, and its tributary, the Saguenay, are pleasant boat trips in summer, and there are the two major cities, Montreal, which is big and sophisticated, and Quebec, smaller and picturesque, with great memories of Wolfe and Montcalm, that are lodestones themselves.

In that mass of land to the north, full of lakes and forests, there are literally thousands of resorts. Let's look at a few to get an idea. For instance, in the Gatineau there is Le Chaperon Rouge at Blue Sea Lake. It is tiny, it has a sandy beach, dancing on week-ends to a five-piece band, fishing in Blue Sea Lake. Nothing pretentious, but then neither is the price—$12 daily for one person or $75 a week. Or take Kan-a-Mouche Fishing and Hunting Lodge at St. Michel des Saints, in Berthier County, 98 miles north of Montreal. Cessnas will fly you from Montreal's airport at $72 per trip (three passengers to a plane), or there is limousine service from Montreal. Once there, you'll find seven bungalows set along the lake, and rates running from $16.50 to $20 a day per person. Trout, pike, walleyes and bass are the catch; moose, deer, bear, partridge and duck in the fall. Meals are dedicated to fishing types, with a French chef in residence.

As for package tours, a week in Montreal, Quebec and the Laurentians costs $119.50 from New York, four days around the Gaspé comes to $100 and up; Quebec, Murray Bay, and the Gaspé Peninsula in eight days costs $249 from Montreal; and Montreal, Quebec and the Saguenay cruise comes to $206 from Boston for nine days. Everybody got that?

Now that brings us to the huge province of Ontario, a vast area that stretches across the top of the Great Lakes with room left over. Or to put it another way, Ontario is as big as Texas with two Oklahomas to boot. Puddles of

HEADING EAST

AT THE LODGES he visited in February (Stray Elks Round-Up Month) Grand Exalted Ruler Horace R. Wisely appropriately stressed the role of subordinate lodges in making welcome any Elks who are new in a community. At Grand Junction, Colo., Lodge on Feb. 4, Mr. Wisely praised local Elks for its efforts in this direction, and urged still greater efforts. Speaking before some 350 Elks—including a number of visitors from neighboring lodges—the Grand Exalted Ruler also lauded the Elks of the state for their various civic activities, including the support of Laradon Hall, the institution in Denver for handicapped children. On hand for the Grand Junction meeting were Grand Lodge Membership Committeeman Campbell F. Rice, State Pres. Dr. Leo Schneider, District Deputies Clarence Metcalf and Merrill Ormsbee and Exalted Ruler Glen I. Dollar.

NEW HAVEN. On Feb. 11, Mr. Wisely arrived in New Haven, Conn., Lodge for the celebration of its Diamond Anniversary. Some 300 guests were at the dinner held in the new lodge rooms, which have been in use for less than a year. Attending this 75th Birthday Celebration were Grand Esteemed Loyal Knight Arthur J. Roy, State Pres. Dr. G. A. Caillouette and District Deputy Richard C. Hannan. Lodge Secretary Edwin J. Maley served as Dinner Committee Chairman and Toastmaster.

NEW YORK STATE. The Grand Exalted Ruler was able to visit three neighboring lodges on Feb. 18, beginning with a luncheon meeting at Mamaroneck, N. Y. Following this meeting, Mr. Wisely proceeded to New Rochelle, where the lodge held a cocktail hour meeting in his honor, and he then visited Ossining Lodge, which entertained him at dinner. On this round of New York State visits, Mr. Wisely was accompanied by James A. Gunn, Chairman of the Grand Lodge Membership and New Lodge Committee. Also present at New Rochelle were District Deputy Martin Traugott, who is Chairman of the State Scholarship Committee, Exalted Ruler Julian Hyman, Lodge Trustee John Comming and Chaplain John Doherty. During this visit, Mr. Wisely had the opportunity to congratulate Mr. Traugott's 13-year-old son Roy on becoming an Eagle Scout in the Troop sponsored by the lodge. Among the 300 in attendance at Ossining were State Vice Pres. C. B. DeLuca, Past District Deputy Leo H. Heithaus, a number of Past Exalted Rulers, Exalted Ruler D. P. Doorley, Lodge Secretary P. E. Tierney and Ossining's Mayor Jesse A. Collyer, a lodge member.

The next day, Feb. 19, found Mr. Wisely at Freeport, N. Y., Lodge, where he was greeted by a delegation of Boy Scouts, the Freeport High School band and over 300 Elks. The lodge held a dinner in honor of the Grand Exalted Ruler, and afterward a meeting was held in the lodge hall. Dignitaries present included Past State Pres. Franklin J. Fitzpatrick, District Deputy Morris Milstein and Past District Deputy Gordon H. Meyer. In charge of the proceedings was Exalted Ruler Joseph T. Kiepler.

More than 500 Elks and their ladies were present (for a full report see News of Lodges in this issue).

TOLEDO, OHIO. The 39th Annual Elks National Bowling Tournament opened in Toledo, Ohio, on March 7, a date which coincided with the dedication of Toledo Lodge's new $300,000 building. This enabled the Grand Exalted Ruler to deliver the principal address at the dedication, and also to open the tournament by rolling the first ball. Dignitaries present for the double event included Past Grand Exalted Rulers Edward J. McCormick and Fred L. Bohn, Grand Forum Chief Justice John C. Cochrane, Grand Inner Guard James W. Plummer, District Deputy E. J. McCormick, Jr., Past District Deputies R. F. Coningham, H. S. Green and K. P. Rumpf, and Mayor John W. Yager.

A highlight of the dedication ceremony was the unveiling of a portrait of Past Grand Exalted Ruler McCormick, honoring his devoted service to the Order. At this time it was announced that the lodge is pledging $1,000 for the Elks National Foundation in the name of Dr. McCormick, who is Treasurer of the Foundation. Exalted Ruler Edward J. Arriving at Augusta Lodge on March 13, Mr. and Mrs. Wisely and Judge McClelland attended a luncheon that afternoon and a dinner-dance that evening. Judge C. Wesley Killebrew, a Past District Deputy, served as Master of Ceremonies, and the guests were also welcomed by Exalted Ruler Jack E. McGahee. Mr. Wisely took this opportunity to commend Georgia Elks for their work to aid needy individuals and handicapped children through such institutions as the Aidmore Crippled Children's Hospital and the Georgia School for Mentally Defective Children at Gracewood. • •

“POWER FOR PEACE”

Armed Forces Day—May 16

OVER the past decade, Armed Forces Day, the third Saturday of May, has become an important date in the calendar of the Nation.

Prior to 1950, Army Day, Air Force Day, Navy Day, and Marine Corps Anniversary were celebrated separately. In line with the unification of the services and the creation of a Department of Defense, Armed Forces Day was proclaimed to symbolize the close working relationship of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, Coast Guard and Reserve components.

“Power for Peace” is the current slogan of the observance and eloquently emphasizes the role of our Nation’s defenders in these uncertain days of cold war. The forces of communism have made it abundantly clear that their aim is world domination. They have been encouraged in this ambition by the ease with which they have been able to subjugate nations which were helpless because of the lack of adequate defense. We can be certain that the prime target is the United States and the sabre-rattling of the Kremlin aggressors leaves no doubt as to their ultimate intentions.

Consequently, dedicated American men and women, here and abroad, who make up the strong bulwark of our military strength in the various branches of the service, are our “Power for Peace”. Allied with them in this effort are civilian groups such as the U.S.O., Civil Air Patrol, Selective Service, Civil Defense, Red Cross and the Elks, through its National Service Commission.

On Armed Forces Day, all branches of military service invite the public to see the defense team in action. Open House programs at Armed Forces installations will be the order of the day. All Elks lodges in the vicinity of such installations are urged to contact the officers in charge in order to give full support to this annual tribute to the protectors of peace.

Those who are dedicating their lives to defend our shores against possible invasion are certainly entitled to an annual expression of gratitude and encouragement. We feel sure that Elks need no urging to participate in this patriotic salute to our Armed Forces.

Return of the "Strays"

Stalling; Jack Banther, Newark; standing: Past State Vice-Pres. A. C. Kind; C. R. Peterson, Elmhurst, Ill.; P.D.D. C. A. Hotaling; host E.R. Joseph Quail; R. E. Culbertson, Pocatello, Ida.; Bayonne P.E.R. R. F. Calvin, and M. W. Begala, Phillipsburg.

"Make them feel at home," Grand Exalted Ruler Horace R. Wisely urged the subordinate lodges last November.

"They talked of their travels and the lodges they had visited, and before the evening was over you could see the feeling of being a stranger had completely disappeared," Hammond, Ind., Lodge reported in March.

"They" are our Stray Elks, and what transpired between Mr. Wisely's statement and the Hammond report should be an inspiration to every lodge in the Order.

The "Stray Elk" is a member who no longer resides within the jurisdiction of his home lodge, and when it was found these "Strays" make up a large part of the number of lapsed members each year, the Grand Exalted Ruler decided to do something about it. Believing that not all these men lose interest in Elkdom and so allow their membership to lapse, but that many may feel Elkdom has lost interest in them, he urged the lodges to make a concentrated effort to round-up the Strays in their areas, invite them to participate in their activities and dedicate the month of February to that purpose.

The Grand Lodge Committee on Lodge Activities played a large part in the success of this endeavor, and while Chairman Vincent H. Grocott is still receiving answers to the questionnaire he sent to the lodges concerning this program, at the time of this writing he had heard from 381 lodges. Their programs were responsible for rounding up 6,292 Strays, and the comments included with their reports are both interesting and enlightening.

It must be remembered that the prime purpose in rounding up these members is to keep Elkdom alive in their minds, to rekindle their pride of membership so that they will not be lost to the Order. The Grand Exalted Ruler therefore urged that in planning these programs the accent be placed on friendship born of the common bond of Brotherhood—how better evidenced than through a warm invitation to share in Elkdom's activities and congeniality?

The majority of lodges reporting not only called the program an excellent idea, but let Chairman Grocott know that the Stray Elks they'd entertained were also tremendously enthusiastic about it. To some lodges, it is a brand-new activity; others have had such a program in operation for several years. An impressive number suggested that it be continued as a regular undertaking—some urging that it be a semi-annual or annual event, others urging that it be a monthly affair. Let it be stated here that the Grand Lodge is more than willing to have these Round-Ups held regularly, with the decision as to how often left to each lodge.

Coeur d'Alene, Ida., San Luis Obispo and Whittier, Calif., Amarillo, Texas, Weehawken, N. J., and Ballard (Seattle), Wash., Lodges were among those who feel that the program is most valuable and that to make it successful lies in keeping in personal touch with the Strays in their areas—particularly, to place them on the lodge's mailing list—a practice of LaGrande, Ore., Lodge, for instance, which is one of several reporting that the Stray Elk effort is one of long-standing on their agenda.

While no effort was made to influence the Strays to sever their ties with their home-town lodges, Chairman Grocott's summation reveals that of the more than 6,000 Strays entertained during February, 1,656 had decided to apply for transfer to affiliate with the lodges near their new homes. Naturally, it is logical to expect some branches of the Order might have a decrease in membership through transfers resulting from this project, but from the remarks included in the reports sent to the Grand Lodge Committee it is obvious that the lodges are aware of the importance of bringing our Stray Elks back into the fold and that, with a maximum effort toward this end on the part of all lodges, their rosters should balance out quite nicely.

For example, Secretary M. D. Trace of Meadville, Pa., writes, "Since the first of February I have issued six transfer dimitts out and received four in. This leads me to believe that the program is being followed up by Secretaries throughout Elkdom. I know I like the idea and am doing all I can to keep in touch with Strays."

Exalted Ruler H. C. McLaurry of Burlington, Iowa, Lodge admits that "some other lodges apparently worked more diligently for we lost a total of 23 members and picked up only eight Stray Elks. However," he continues optimistically, "we feel that the program is a healthy step toward greater participation and progress and we are 100 per cent for it." All lodges reporting made it an all-out effort—officers and their wives were present to welcome the newcomers and in many cases dignitaries of the Order were also on hand. Past Grand Exalted Ruler Frank J. Lonergan addressed the 71 Strays entertained by Grand Esteemed Lecturing Knight D. V. Bulger and the other Elks of Portland, Ore.

The terrific promotion campaign put on by Membership Chairman Nick Carr made the Sacramento, Calif., event "not only a success, but a huge success," to quote Exalted Ruler Vernon E. Dole. The full-day program found nearly 150 Strays at a lodge session, initiation, reception and dinner.

These and the other Round-Ups represented here photographically, reflect the tone and atmosphere of hundreds of others, and as Phoenix, Ariz., Lodge's report stated, "We have learned much from the initial trial and are confident we can improve . . ."

This is the spirit Grand Exalted Ruler Wisely had hoped for when he reminded the entire membership of the Order that "Elkdom Follows The Elk".

OLD TIMERS OF SPRINGFIELD, MASS., Lodge, No. 61, were honored for the fifth consecutive year at an outstandingly successful dinner and entertainment attended by 400 persons. The affair also observed "Stray Elks Night" when Exalted Ruler Edward J. O'Brien welcomed 28 residents of his city who hold membership in other lodges.

Each year this event pays signal tribute to one or more of the lodge's veteran members. In 1958, for instance, Wm. B. Belli and Pat Casey shared the spotlight. The latter, the only living Charter Member of the 59-year-old lodge and long prominent in the theatrical world, was honored again this year when No. 61's senior Past Exalted Ruler, Past Grand Exalted Ruler James R. Nicholson, was selected as special guest and principal speaker by a committee headed by Charles J. Donovan. District Deputy Robert J. Armstrong also attended this affair for which Past Exalted Ruler Thomas F. Barry was General Chairman, assisted by sub-Chairmen Past Exalted Ruler Paul L. Keating, Robert F. Driscoll and John D. McBride.

DURANGO, Colorado, Lodge's "Round-Up" brought in some 30 Strays through every device known to man—a stretcher, wheel-chair, wheelbarrow, even a rope, as this photograph testifies.

FLOOD-RAVAGED FREMONT, OHIO, is about back to normal now, but the community will never forget the assistance given by the Elks of Fremont Lodge No. 169 throughout the horror-filled hours during which the Sandusky River raged through the city's main street twice in 22 days.

Undoubtedly the most heroic and unselfish member of the lodge is Henry W. Sprang, 72-year-old chef for the Elks of Fremont. Early in the morning of January 22nd he was awakened at his hotel and told there were men waiting at the lodge home for his assistance in preparing food for police, the military and others doing rescue and guard duty. He rushed to the club and worked there continuously for 25½ hours. During the next five days he never left the lodge home, on duty 143 hours with only 13 hours given to cat-naps. Coffee and food were available on a 24-hour basis, with 400 persons fed daily.

When flood waters struck again on February 10th, Henry Sprang was there to resume his duties. During the next 61 hours in which the river took over the city, he spent 59 of them in his kitchen.

This selfless devotion to his fellowman is in the best tradition of Elkdom. And not only Henry Sprang, but the entire membership of the lodge has received heartfelt thanks and highest praise from all sources.

Exalted Ruler Jack D. House headed the Special Rehabilitation Committee which organized teams from neighboring lodges to furnish truckloads of warm clothing, food and necessary equipment. With this outstanding teamwork, there wasn't a minute during the emergencies when relief was not available.

ELKS LARADON HALL for Exceptional Children, long sponsored by the Colorado Elks Assn., has added facilities in the new John R. Coen Vocational Trades Building.

Dedicated by the officers of Sterling Lodge of which the late Past Grand Exalted Ruler John R. Coen was a member, the new building will be of tremendous benefit to the 70 children now enrolled. Grand Trustee Jacob L. Sherman delivered the dedicatory address.

Mrs. Coen was an honored guest at these ceremonies at which Grand Exalted Ruler Horace R. Wisely was another speaker, along with the Hon. Will F. Nicholson, Mayor of Denver where the School is located. The outstanding Greeley Elks Chorus sang several numbers during the program at which Duke W. Dunbar, Colorado's Attorney General and a Director of the Hall, presided. Other dignitaries on hand included State Pres. Dr. Leo Schneider and Past Pres. Byron A. Anderson.

LONG-TIME ELKS were among the 165 persons attending the special dinner held by Council Bluffs, Ia., Lodge, No. 531, in honor of its Old Timers and Past Exalted Rulers. Elks of more than 20 years' standing were the recipients of gifts, and 80-year-old A. N. Kolb accepted an Honorary Life Membership from State Pres. James Tait. The oldest Old-Timers on hand were Bert Clark, E. J. McKinley and I. B. Rohrer, all members more than 50 years.

Following a chicken dinner, a group of Past Exalted Rulers initiated a class of 12 candidates who were addressed by Mr. Tait and State Vice-Pres. Robert Weichman. Other dignitaries present were Past District Deputies Leo D. Gardner and Harry G. Burrell.

AN EXCITING EVENT took place in Joplin, Mo., recently when well over 500 Elks and their wives attended the 5th Annual Four-State Initiation meeting. In the afternoon a class of candidates from lodges throughout the Arkansas, Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma area took the obligation of membership and in the evening a banquet was held. At that time, Grand Exalted Ruler Horace R. Wisely was the forceful main speaker, concluding his remarks with the statement that "the secret of our success in the Order is found in leadership".

Mayor C. C. Haynes was introduced by host Exalted Ruler Joe Ben Gold and brief talks were given by Past Grand Exalted Rulers Joseph B. Kyle of Indiana and Earl E. James of Oklahoma.

District Deputy Walter Schweikert, as General Chairman, introduced the Presidents of the participating State Associations—J. I. Malham of Arkansas, G. E. Edwards of Kansas, C. J. Ellis of Missouri and C. H. Dietz of Oklahoma—each of whom then presented his fellow officers. The initiatory ritual was handled expertly by a selected group of officers from the area, all of whom have won a first-place award in ritualistic competition.

Among the other Elk luminaries present were Grand Lodge Committeemen Guy D. Moore and Bert Wysor.

L. A. LEWIS, Past Grand Exalted Ruler, complimented the Elks of Fresno, Calif., Lodge, No. 439, on their wise and forward-looking approach in building to the future of the Order. This praise was contained in his talk delivered when the home of Fresno Lodge was dedicated by District Deputy W. C. Hanawalt.

The building, its furnishings and the land on which it was erected, represent an investment of $550,000. With 30,514 square feet of floor space, the structure is located on a 16-acre tract four miles from downtown Fresno.

Past Exalted Ruler K. H. McIsaac was Chairman of the program at which Exalted Ruler D. M. Linder welcomed the lodge's many visitors.

THE OVERNIGHT VISIT of Elks of California's West Central District and their wives to San Luis Obispo Lodge No. 322 was an unqualified success. The occasion was a Clinic Meeting called by District Deputy John D. Morris for all Exalted Rulers, Est. Leading Knights and Secretaries, of the area. San Luis Obispo Elksdom had 104 visitors, all of whom were met at the station by a reception committee led by Exalted Ruler Joseph Limon, and taken to the lodge home by Transportation Chairman and Est. Loyal Knight Richard L. Simon.

Henry Gattaneo was General Chairman for the program which included sight-seeing trips for the ladies. In the evening a hard-working group of local members served a beef barbecue to their guests. Among them were Past District Deputies Ray A. Macaulay, M. N. Watters, L. T. Brazier, E. J. Silva and Paul Sanchez.

A RATHER UNUSUAL OPEN HOUSE program was held by Hotchkiss, Colo., Lodge, No. 1807, recently. In conjunction with the VA Hospital at Grand Junction, the Hotchkiss Elks sponsored the event for the purpose of securing blood for the patients of the VA Hospital, and also for St. Mary's Hospital in Grand Junction which needed blood to replace that used by a Hotchkiss Elk.

Grand Junction Lodge's Activities Chairman for the VA Hospital, G. W.

McFall, made the arrangements for this project, with the cooperation of Hotchkiss Lodge's Exalted Ruler C. G. Douglass, Est. Leading Knight W. E. Brown and Trustee Clement Audin, Jr., Past Exalted Ruler.

G. T. Grover, Blood Coordinator for the VA Hospital, with four assistants including two doctors from his staff, made the 60-mile trip to Hotchkiss to handle the operation. They were most enthusiastic in expressing their thanks for the success of the project—in two hours, 35 pints of blood were obtained.

A COLLEGIATE FOOTBALL GREAT was honored recently by Ansonia, Conn., Lodge, No. 1269. He is Nick Pietrosante, Notre Dame's highly honored fullback, and he handled the role of principal speaker at the lodge's 5th Annual Sports Night program with all the poise you'd expect of a star athlete in his own home town. Nick is an Ansonia boy, and an overflow gathering of over 200 packed the lodge home to pay tribute to him.

Following a roast beef dinner, Postmaster D. J. McCarthy, Exalted Ruler of the lodge, introduced the speakers, among them Mayor J. A. Doyle, local high school Coach Charles Jarvis, former Coach John Janenda, Arthur Forst, one of the early All-Americans from Villanova, and Joseph Pietrosante, Sr., father of the guest of honor.

JOINING FORCES with the Anti-Narcotics Committee, Torrance, Calif., Lodge, No. 1948, selected "The Terrible Effects of Narcotics" as the topic for its annual essay contest this year. Open to students of all junior and senior high schools of the District, the competition was sponsored by the lodge's Americanism Committee of which Paul L. Warren is Chairman and Lambert Brownlee is Co-Chairman.

With the cooperation of Curriculum Consultant Dr. Max M. Appleby of the School District, the competition was a great success, with over 100 essays submitted to a panel of seven judges. U. S. Bonds were offered as prizes.

Contestants were given the choice of writing 500 words on the effects of narcotics in the home, in the school or to the country in general, with five weeks for research and preparation of their papers. The first award of a $100 Bond was won by John Butterfield; the second-place $50 Bond went to Lenora Calitri, and the third prize of $25 was awarded to JoAnne Bone.

REDONDO BEACH, California, Lodge's E.R. R. A. Miller extends a welcome to Andrew Halloran, a member of Framingham, Mass., Lodge and Grand Worthy President of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, at the banquet the lodge held in his honor.

LINCOLN, Nebraska, Lodge is proud of its new Memorial Tablet. After a year's research and planning, a committee of P.E.R.'s decided on this handsome Book of Memory as one which will fill the lodge's requirements for many years. The Book rests on a podium of white oak in a niche in the lodge's trophy room, before drapes of a light metallic fabric which enhances its beauty. Under its hinged door are five copper sheets with a capacity of more than the lodge's present membership of 2,200. The first page is now filled with the names of 440 Departed Members, dating back to 1912. At left is E.R. Wm. D. Quinn; at right is P.E.R. H. F. Herminghaus.

MICHIGAN ELKDOM is responsible for the happy smile on the face of Julia Bowles, 14-year-old polio victim. Because of a setback in her physical condition, Julia could not start her high school education. When Hillsdale Lodge's Handicapped Children's Committee Chairman Orrin H. Pibbles heard of her plight, he referred the problem to the State Elks' Major Project Commission. As a result, Elk Dist. Vice-Pres. Milton McKay, local manager of the Mich. Bell Telephone Company, arranged a 25-mile communication system to connect the girl's bedroom with her classrooms. The line goes through two exchanges and is channeled to four classrooms so she is in direct two-way contact with all her classes.

LODGE NOTES

Three-year-old Fullerton, Calif., Lodge has a new building under construction. Its current membership is 2,000 and it anticipates a potential roster of 3,000. Secretary W. P. Osenbaugh informs us that his lodge is looking for a first-rate, well-qualified Club Manager to take care of its new home and invites interested readers to write him giving full details, including salary requested and references. Address these applications to Mr. Osenbaugh, P. O. Box 136, Fullerton, Calif.

It is with deep gratification that we take note of the stamped legend now gracing the envelopes carrying mail from Staten Island, N. Y., Lodge. This stamp reads:

Patronize the Advertisers
in The Elks Magazine
Only the best quality products
THE MAGAZINE NEEDS YOU: WE NEED THE MAGAZINE.

This outstanding cooperation with the Order's official publication is most commendable, and extremely helpful.

Towson, Md., Elksdom has lost a loyal member in the recent passing of Frank I. Wheeler, Sr. A Charter Member of this lodge, Mr. Wheeler was its first Est. Loyal Knight and served as its third Exalted Ruler in 1900-01. He had also been a Trustee for several years and was elected to Honorary Life Membership in 1945.

Teams from Delta, Montrose, Cortez and Durango recently participated in the Colo. S. W. Dist. Double A High School Basketball Tourney in Durango. After the two-day competition was completed, the Durango Elks held a "Teen-age Dance" open to all youngsters from all areas of the District. Over 400 teenagers attended.

Quincy, Mass., Lodge celebrated Past Exalted Rulers Day and observed its 54th Anniversary with the initiation of 15 candidates. Among them were the three sons-in-law of Past Exalted Ruler Larry Antonelli, who served as Exalted Ruler during the ceremony. Each initiate received an Elk's lapel pin from Exalted Ruler L. M. Foley.

When the Eldred Sunset Manor Foundation dedicated the $1,300,000 first wing of the $2,500,000 Eldred Chronic Diseases Hospital in Central Utah recently, members of the Order played prominent roles in the ceremony. First of all, L. J. Eldred, who, with his wife, created the Foundation four years ago, has been a member of Provo, Utah, Lodge for 55 years. Secondly, Seth Billings, who is President of the non-profit Eldred Foundation, is also a prominent Provo Elk and served as Grand Tiler in 1957-58.

Minot, No. Dak., Lodge has two noteworthy members. Paul V. Barber handles the lodge office during the evening, taking all phone calls, collecting dues and parking rentals, and addressing all lodge communications, even though he is blind. He is also Vice-President of the Elks Quarter Back Club. Deeply interested in sports, Mr. Barber was a fine athlete before he lost his sight. Minot Elks are also very proud of A. E. Tooley. Initiated in May, 1911, he has served his lodge as Treasurer for 44 consecutive years.

WRITES FROM WASHINGTON

U. S. BUILDS IN BERLIN. Just to let Russia know we intend to stay in Berlin, the Defense Dept. is now building more apartments for U. S. military personnel and their families there. A new project now started in Berlin will add 116 family units, making a total of 368.

BIGGEST ELEPHANT. Spring crowds at the Smithsonian Institution stare goggle-eyed at the mounted hide of the world's biggest elephant. The trophy is in the rotunda of the National History Building. The elephant was shot in Southwestern Africa in 1955 and weighed over 12 tons. It stands more than 13 feet high. The tusks of the elephant weigh more than 100 lbs. each. J. J. Fenykovi killed it after a day-long battle. It took 19 bullets from a .416 caliber rifle. The elephant's skin alone weighed more than two tons. Jumbo, the former champion elephant, was 20 inches shorter.

TAX PAYMENTS IMPROVE. Now that the Federal income tax deadline has passed, Treasury experts are hoping the returns will show a further decrease in delinquent tax payers. Last year there were 1,280,642 owing $1,375,737,000. This compares with 1,554,876 tax payers who owed $1,504,709,972 at the end of 1957.

U. S. SENATORS have better protection under new rules, just issued for the Senate wing of the Capitol. No person is allowed into the galleries carrying any package, bundle, suitcase, briefcase or camera. There is no smoking, applauding or demonstration of any kind. There can be no note-taking or sketching, except by correspondents in the press gallery. No object of any kind can be placed on the gallery railing. Rules against smoking have been modified, however, and smoking is now permitted in the corridors and passageways of the Senate wing. Senators, under the new rules, cannot bring friends on to the Senate floor when the Senate is not in session and permit them to sit at the desks of famous colleagues.

JOBS FOR OLDER PEOPLE. Small Business Administration, in a survey by Harry David, of under-used sources of employees, declares jobs for workers 45 years and over are bound to increase. In the decade ahead, the survey says, 10,000,000 new workers will be needed and employers will look to "older" employees to fill part of the gap.

PROBES AIR TRAVEL. Too many Government workers are using de luxe plane flights between the U. S. and Europe, Rep. Tollefson of Mich. declares, in requesting an investigation. Round trip fare on "champagne" flights is $903.40, while the economy rate is $478.70, Rep. Tollefson said.

NEW HOSPITAL PLAN. The rising cost of hospital care has finally won the attention of Congress. Among the bills now before the House is one by Rep. Aime J. Forand of R. I., which would extend hospital and nursing home care to Social Security pensioners. It would provide up to 60 hospital days a year and would also cover surgery. To finance it, Social Security taxes would rise an added $12 a year and each employer would match this for every worker.

ROBOTS SORT MAIL. In Washington's new City Post Office, a cancelling machine handles 30,000 letters an hour. A semi-automatic mail sorter can route 14,400 packages an hour to 32 destinations. There are five miles of conveyor belts. The automation cost $12 million.

HUSH-HUSH C. I. A. Central Intelligence Agency is so super-secret that wives of workers in the place don't even know what their husbands do. When one prospective juror was asked about friend husband in C. I. A., she said, "I don't know what he does and I don't want to know." She did admit, however, that, before he took the job, he inspected eggs. "Well, maybe he inspects eggs for C. I. A.," the judge commented.

YOUR MAIN STREET, like mine, is facing trouble. Buying habits of the American people have changed rapidly in the last few years and super-shopping plazas are getting the play. Merchants here and owners of real estate are plainly worried. Within recent weeks, two additional huge suburban shopping centers have opened. One, the $1 million Prince Georges Plaza, has 4,000 free and easy parking spaces on all sides. There are 32 modern stores. The other giant shopping center, the Congressional Plaza, covers five city blocks and has over 300,000 square feet of floor space. It too has free parking space for thousands of cars. Various lines of business which maintain national headquarters in Washington are seeking a solution of the problem. In Washington, the downtown stores have banded together to provide free parking at garages and lots.

OLDEST NEWSPAPER. As a real, honest-to-goodness American newspaper, The Alexandria Gazette, now beginning its 175th year, is in a class by itself. It is this country's oldest newspaper and, in its recent anniversary edition, printed 128 pages. Editor Charles C. Carlin, Jr., has been receiving congratulations from readers throughout the nation. President Eisenhower said, "The files of the Gazette are an invaluable source of American history." Late Past Grand Exalted Ruler Robert S. Barrett was at one time Editor and Publisher.

CAPITAL CHERRIES. Senate Republican Leader Dirksen says Senators talk too much about Berlin and other trouble spots. . . AFL-CIO's one-day unemployment mass meeting here cost about $500,000. . . Radioactivity is increasing in Washington because of Russian nuclear tests but is still far below the danger level, Public Health Service says. . . America has 3 million men in its reserve forces, Defense Dept. told Congress. . . Marriages have been decreasing for the past two years and the rate is now down to 8.3 per 1,000, compared to 9.4 in 1956. . . Boy Scouts here ordered an $8.50 cake and, by mistake, the baker produced one three feet high, price, $85, but the baker paid the difference. . . A $213,000 water sports center has been held up because of water pollution. . . The District now has over 666,000 government workers, of which 666,000 drink coffee at 10 a. m.

SOME FACTS AND FALLACIES

Despite thousands of years of association between men and dogs, we still cling to many misconceptions about the canine species

By ED FAUST

AMONG the many mysteries insoluble to me is how little man knows about dogs although archeological evidence points to nearly 10,000 years of association between the two. That's a long time on anybody's calendar other than the anthropologist, to whom this is a mere fragment of the past and who assures us that remnants of Fido have been found in the caves of his Stone Age masters.

Now you'd think that such long association, out of which came the affection that exists among men and dogs would have endowed the former with much better understanding of the latter; but the world still awaits the individual who can prevent the not at all uncommon dog disease, distemper. Aside from those tolerated persons who tell shaggy dog stories who, who in all the world, really understands dog language? No, our four-legged friend still remains pretty much a mystery, which accounts for the many misconceptions and superstitions that persist among many otherwise well informed people. You wouldn't believe it, of course you wouldn't, but it's a fact that there are those who think a sure test of a pure bred dog is to pick him up by the tail. If he yelps he's no blue-blood.

Others will tell you that feeding sweets to Fido will give him internal parasites. Unless the wigglers are on the candy or such-like, Fido isn't capable of creating them on his own. And milk, innocent milk—I've been assured by several people who claim to know all about dogs, that milk given to puppies will always, yes, always have the same effect. Nonsense? Not to the folks who believe it.

Notwithstanding the fact that the dog is a carnivorous animal, a meat eater from his jungle days, there are citizens who hold that this nutritious food will start any dog on the warpath. Another twisted thought is that the purp possesses an instinct for chasing cats, that both critters have been enemies from way back. Webster says instinct is a hereditary factor in behavior. If this is so then countless generations of dogs have inherited the impulse to chase horses, cattle, automobiles and small boys and girls on bicycles. The only instinctive element is that many dogs will chase anything moving across their lines of vision or away from them. A cat is usually shy, while Fido is quite the opposite.

Sometimes it's difficult to separate a superstition from a simple, firmly held misconception, and here's a wrong-headed opinion that has to go begging for a label. It is a common idea that the dog of mixed breeding is smarter and healthier than the aristocratic pooch. The dog of unknown ancestry simply represents a survival of the fittest. His folks had to be smart to stay alive and healthy enough to survive to become

FROM OUR READERS

I have just finished reading Al Stump's "Baseball: Better Then or Now?" in the February issue, and I enjoyed it very much. It looks to me as if the old timers got the best of it. Give us more of the same.

To bring up a much discussed subject, what about the matter of standardizing the baseball outfield? This improvement is long overdue and, actually, the present artfully arranged outfields are a disgrace to the great game of baseball. Isn't it about time for something to be done to remedy this? The infield is standardized; the football field is standardized; the tennis court is standardized, and so on and on. Yours for better baseball.

AUSTIN, TEXAS WARREN S. FREUND

I enjoy reading THE ELKS MAGAZINE very much, especially the articles on do-it-yourself projects which appear each month in Harry Walton's department, The Elks Home Workshop.

OAKMONT, PA. ANDREW BORDY

Let me take this opportunity to thank the members of your Travel Department and the Sinclair Refining Company for their cooperation and for the information they gave us, which made our last vacation a successful one.

When we traveled over the routes that were marked out for us, we knew that we would have miles of pleasant traveling.

BUTLER, PA. H. V. PACOE

I wish to express my sincere gratitude for the very prompt and thorough information I have received from the Travel Department of THE ELKS MAGAZINE.

As a member of the Order in military service, I have not been as actively engaged in lodge work as I would like, but I am looking forward to it upon my retirement from the United States Coast Guard in 1961 or 1962. I have always enjoyed THE ELKS MAGAZINE, but was not aware of the excellent travel service offered.

CHICAGO, ILL. ROBERT E. BONVILLE

It is always a gratifying experience to find that the reaction of readers to a series of articles is enthusiastic. The following are some of the letters that have been received in response to such a series—the articles concerned with the many aspects of small business, designed to be of aid to the great number of Elks who are small businessmen.

We wish to compliment you on the article in the March issue—entitled "Program for Protection"—dealing with insurance for business concerns. We believe the article should be helpful to a great many merchants and other businessmen.

However, we would like to clarify the application of the co-insurance clause discussed by the author, Eugene Rachlis. This clause states that: "The insured shall at all times maintain contributing insurance on each item of property covered by this policy to the extent of at least the percentage specified." In other words, the percentage of co-insurance stated in the policy shall be a minimum amount, and at least that much must be carried. We thought possibly you might like to have this brought out. Again, we wish to compliment you on the article.

SALINA, KANSAS OTHO SCHMIDT

I have only been an Elk for one year, but I would like to say that the small business articles which have appeared in THE ELKS MAGAZINE are well worth reading for any businessman, regardless of the type and size of his enterprise.

DERRY, PA. JOE E. GREUBEL

We very much enjoyed the Eugene Rachlis article—"Program for Protection"—in the March issue.

ST. PAUL, MINN. D. F. TUCKER
INSURANCE MANAGER
HAMM BREWING CO.

I have found all of the articles on small business very helpful and enlightening. I hope that you will continue featuring them in future issues.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH MORRIS ROSEN

We enjoyed the article "Government Regulations and Small Business" by Dickson Hartwell—in the April issue—and hope that there will be more of such articles in the future.

INDEPENDENCE, ORE. A. F. OPPLIGER

Time for a Checkup?

Who knows, maybe it is. You get checkups on everything else — your health, your kids, the car.

So why not your investments, too?

After all, times change—and so do security values. The stocks you bought five years ago may have been just fine for your purposes then — but what about now?

Maybe your objectives have changed.

Maybe other stocks offer far better opportunities.

Maybe there are definite weak spots here and there in your portfolio.

That's why we think every investor should get a good financial checkup from time to time . . . find out just what his investment program looks like to a practiced, impartial observer.

And if you'd like to know what we think of the stocks you own, we'll be happy to tell you.

Our Research Department will mail you an objective review of your present portfolio, give you all the facts they can about any particular stocks you may want to buy or sell, or prepare a complete investment program for any sum, any objective.

There's no charge for this service, either. Whether you're a customer or not.

If you'd like an investment checkup, just write us a letter about your situation. You simply address—

That's because it's a special blend with sun ripened Golden Isle leaf that's completely new in character, — so light, smooth and modern in taste.

This new Wally Frank MAVERICK promises to completely revolutionize the cigar business. We plan to bring out these MAVERICKS to compete with long slim cigars selling for luxury prices. But before we spend big money in advertising, we want your opinion as a cross check on our own tremendous enthusiasm. We'll rush you a full box of 50 Humidor-fresh MAVERICKS. Send us nothing for the cigars we've written them off for the test . . . . Just send $1.00 to help cover postage, expense cigar tax and handling on this non-profit transaction. When they arrive, test smoke 25 on the house and tell us what you think of them. Then if you're not delighted return the balance for your $1.00 back in full. Sorry only 1 box to a customer.

WALLY FRANK Ltd. Dept. A119
132 Church St., New York 7, N. Y.

Send me a box of 50 MAVERICKS described above — I enclose $1.00. I'll test smoke 25 and give you my honest opinion of them, and if I'm not delighted I'll return the balance for my dollar back. (in U.S.A. only.)

In the Dog House

ancestors of the mixed breed of today. What the mongrel's enthusiasts don't see are the thousands of dogs of bygone times that perished because they weren't able mentally or physically.

It's a truth in the minds of many that the color of a dog's coat is a clue to his disposition. A red coat means a vicious dog, a spotted coat a genius at hunting. It would be equally truthful to say that anyone wearing blue feels that way. Have you your blues on today?

Then there's that old saying "You can't teach an old dog new tricks"—you've probably heard it. If so, file and forget it. Experienced trainers will tell you that many dogs well on in years have not only been taught new tricks or commands but some that have never been schooled before have learned to obey. The older dog may be a bit more difficult to teach than the youngster but in nearly every instance the older pooch has been trained to tricks or commands. One of the oldest I know about was a Dalmatian aged ten who was successfully trained in official obedience work. For the average dog the life span is 12 to 14 years, so the ten-year-old pupil was not exactly a puppy.

It wouldn't do to leave this one out—the preposterous idea that the man or woman who doesn't like dogs is not to be trusted or the dog that shies away from certain people instinctively knows those folks are bad actors. Many fine people just don't happen to be enthusiastic about Fido and there's nothing they or anyone else can do about it. Then there are dogs that just don't happen to care for certain people. Nothing mysterious about either case. One of the more reckless steeplechase jockeys I ever knew, a wild Irishman from Boston, had a horror fixation about cats. Yet I saw him successfully pilot horses that other experienced jocks couldn't be bribed to ride.

Testing for breeding—somewhere you may have met or may meet someone who will assure you that a black mouth is an infallible sign of a dog's pure breeding. Don't believe it. Many dogs have mouths spotted with black and an ancestry equally spotted. The only dog with a mouth required to be black is the chowchow and this is a matter of specification in the dog's standard as established by the Chowchow Club.

This isn't a superstition but a misconception, although firmly held by many people and for no good reason. It concerns the fantastic idea that certain breeds are vicious and certain others are smarter than their cousins. Neither is true. Dogs, as I've written many times in these pages, differ as do people. There are ugly tempered specimens among them but no uniformly vicious breeds. Some of the larger dogs of the working division are more reserved and less inclined to fraternize with strange people than other breeds. But these are not vicious any more than the quiet, shy, reserved person would be. Most dogs of working type, collie, Doberman pinscher, boxer, great Dane, for example, are dogs originating in sparsely settled farm areas where strangers were few and as such were viewed with suspicion. The descendants of these dogs still retain that quality of reserve, which has nothing to do with viciousness. They just don't welcome overhandling by people they don't know too well. As for one breed being smarter than another, that is not so either. In all breeds there are fatheads and intelligent dogs. Naturally the breeds that have had the closest association with man, usually the smaller dogs kept as house pets, have developed better understanding of man's requirements and have handed down to successive generations that knowledge or perception of human conduct. Some dogs of some of the breeds erroneously believed to be smarter than most dogs will at times absolutely refuse to learn a command and will unexpectedly do the most foolish things. But then, to repeat, dogs in many ways are like people. Each is an individual.

The Girl Scouts Thank Mr. Wisely

All Elks will greatly appreciate the recognition of their assistance to youth, contained in the following letter from Mrs. Malcolm S. Edgar, First Vice President of the Girl Scouts, received by Grand Exalted Ruler Horace R. Wisely:

"On behalf of the Girl Scouts of the United States of America, I am happy to send congratulations on the excellent Youth Day Proclamation issued by the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks (in the March issue). At a time when so much criticism is leveled at youth, it is most heartening to have attention called to the fine qualities and achievements of our young people.

"We also appreciate the birthday salute to the Girl Scouts which appears in the March issue of THE ELKS MAGAZINE. Thank you very much for the interest and support of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks."

For Elks Who Travel

lakes dot the Province all the way up to Hudson Bay and James Bay, which border it on the north. Here are a couple of typical resorts: Killarney Lodge, on the Lake of the Two Rivers in Algonquin Park, is 188 miles from Toronto and 180 miles from Ottawa. The lodge is a collection of log bungalows on a peninsula jutting into the lake, and all of them have hot water and showers. There is a sandy beach, fishing for trout, bass and perch, hiking trails in the Park, and day-long canoe trips for fishermen and photographers. The weekly rate comes to $60 to $75 per person if two people occupy a double room. Youngsters are charged three quarters of the adult fare.

Less woody and more resorty is Cleverlands House on Lake Rousseau, in the Muskoka region of Canada. It can take about 200 people, offers tennis, water skiing, trail riding, and golf on a six-hole course. There is another full sized links nearby. From Toronto: 139 miles. Rates are anywhere from $9 to $17 a day, depending upon the number of people occupying the same room, the season, and the location of the quarters.

Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are a broad stretch of prairie land full of lakes, canoes, Indians, boat trips and fishing lodges. Western Airlines and Northwest Airlines have fishing tours to Arctic Lodge at Reindeer Lake in Northern Saskatchewan. Western's offering comes to about $500 from Minneapolis and St. Paul, including meals, lodging, guides' fees, boats and the plane from the Twin Cities. Another trip in the prairies is the ride on the S.S. Keenora up Lake Winnipeg to Norway House. It costs $75 for the four-day trip from Selkirk, Manitoba, with stopover privileges available at Norway House.

The Prairies grow into the Rockies in Alberta, perhaps Canada's most awesome scenery. Banff, the Canadian Pacific's resort, is a great stone palace looking down the alley of a valley with great white-topped peaks rising behind. Nearby is Chateau Lake Louise with its glacier sliding into the lake, its bordering poppies, and its glass-enclosed heated swimming pool. There are 400 rooms with bath at Chateau Lake Louise, 600 rooms with bath at Banff Springs. The CPR offers two-day tours of the Rockies, beginning at $54 per person, two in a room, to seven-day tours at $191.25 for one person in a superior accommodation. The Canadian National has a lovely resort at Jasper in the Rockies, with upholstered log lodge living and a green-carpeted golf course famous for its layout and for its bears that provide a mobile obstacle.

On the west coast there is the water-land of Vancouver and Vancouver Island and the lovely city of Victoria, where roses bloom all year around. The inland cruises are like Norwegian fjord trips. Union Steamships offers independent cruises from Vancouver along the British Columbia Coast, and any number of cruises are available that go beyond Canada into the edge of Alaska and along the Trail of '98.

Finally, anybody seeking to get absolutely away from it all can bed down in the most de luxe fishing resort ever conceived. It is called Charctic Lodge and is located at Ward's Inlet of Frobisher Bay, Baffin Island, in the Northwest Territories of Canada. Frobisher Bay sees civilization quite often, what with TWA and SAS stopping by on over-the-pole flights. The tab at this place is a piddling $1,500 a week, including air travel from Montreal. For that they ought to put the fish on the hook, and mount it afterward.

BASEBALL season is with us again and this year all 16 major league teams will use United Airlines Mainliners during the 1959 season. Charter trips began April 3rd, when Cleveland and San Francisco shared a DC-7 Mainliner from Phoenix to Salt Lake City for an exhibition game.

Those of our readers who want to recover from the long winter might try island hopping. You stop a day, a week—at Bermuda, Puerto Rico, Virgin Isles, St. Kitts, Jamaica and Nassau—all this at the low cost of $228.70 (Tourist Class) round trip from New York. Get in touch with BOAC (British Overseas Airways Corporation), Dept. BWT-8, 530 Fifth Avenue, New York 36, N. Y.

Here is another wonderful way to forget your troubles: take an Alcoa Steamship cruise on one of their newest cargo-passenger ships out of New Orleans. This will be your home for 16 wonderful days. Everything from air-conditioning to radar has been installed to make your cruise comfortable, convenient and safe. The ship will carry about 60 passengers,

Elks National Home News

Once again the beauty of the Elks National Home in Bedford, Va., has made news in many places.

GERMAN MAGAZINE. Brother Herman Hundhausen, who came to this country from Germany 50 years ago, has been a resident of the Home for eight years, and has written a number of articles about the beauty of his residence. One of his articles appeared last year in a West German newspaper, and another appeared more recently in the German-language American newspaper, the Neu York Staats-Zeitung und Herold. His latest journalistic appearance is in Krupp Mitteilungen, a magazine published by Germany's Krupp Industries. In a letter to the Editors, Mr. Hundhausen relates some of his experiences in Germany and in America (he once had a business connection with Krupp) and he sends greetings to his old friends in Essen from his present home at Bedford. With his letter there appeared this photograph, showing Mr. Hundhausen strolling before the Home.

NEW ROCHELLE BULLETIN. In a recent issue of Pierrot, the bulletin of New Rochelle, N. Y., Lodge, Brothers Thomas Kiernan, Alfred Ford and Adolph Sprechter give an account of a visit they made to the Home. In describing their tour with official guide C. R. Russ, they term the beautiful buildings and grounds a true monument to Elkdom. The visitors were also greatly impressed by the organ music which is played each evening by Mrs. Brady, wife of Superintendent Thomas J. Brady. Of Mr. Brady himself the article says: "His ability, ingenuity and perception make him an outstanding man in this important position."

BEDFORD PAPERS. The Elks National Home also receives frequent praise from the newspapers of neighboring Bedford, Va. For example, the Bedford Democrat recently reported that a group of civic leaders who visited the Home were profoundly impressed by the improvements lately made there (reported in the February issue of THE ELKS MAGAZINE). The paper printed this comment by Mayor E. L. Carlyle, speaking for the group: "This has been a very fine experience and our community is wonderfully fortunate in having this Home here."

Our Need For Negatives

In an effort to improve the quality of our photographic reproductions in the fraternal news pages, we adopted a new policy last year with regard to our requirements for the fraternal photographs we publish.

It has been determined that very often a better print may be secured when we are able to have one made to our own specifications. We are therefore requesting that, whenever possible, the negatives be sent along with the glossy prints of all photographs submitted for publication in the Magazine. We shall be more than pleased to return both negatives and prints after they have served this purpose.

Your cooperation in supplying us with negatives of lodge photos will help us to maintain a high standard of quality in your Magazine and will give a much more satisfactory presentation for your lodge as well as for its activities.

We have had an impressive response to our request for negatives, but it has not been 100 per cent. While we do realize that certain local photographers are reluctant to lend us their negatives, we nevertheless urge you to continue to try to obtain them. We repeat that all negatives will be returned promptly after we have made our prints.

If you are unable to secure a negative, please let us know when you submit the print. You will be informed immediately as to whether or not it will be possible for us to reproduce your print.

The cooperation we are receiving from the majority of lodges is deeply appreciated. We are publishing this reminder for the benefit of those who may have overlooked previous notices in this connection. We are sure all of you will cooperate in this endeavor to better the appearance of your Magazine.

Little League baseball diamond. Philadelphia Electric issues a manual on trees for city beautification. A General Motors plant lends fuel to a hospital during a coal strike. A pipe line company permits adjacent residents to farm its right of way and demonstrates soil control.

Some efforts are purely mechanical: the distribution of films to club and church groups. Some involve heroism. When in 1955 hurricanes Connie and Diane dumped eleven inches of rain in the popular Pocono Mountains vacation area of Pennsylvania, thousands of threatened children in summer camps were isolated from frantic parents. For 72 hours there was no public power. More than 7,500 telephone stations were wiped out. Telephone employees met the emergency—one woman struggled 14 hours to get to her post. They built a new bridge, laid miles of cable and gradually restored vital communications.

In practicing the gentle art of being a good neighbor, big business has been plagued by the sometimes conflicting desire of making a significant contribution and at the same time seeking appropriate recognition. Appropriate recognition has often been translated to mean lots of publicity. The natural urge for kudos and fanfare—temperately described as a “don't-hide-your-light-under-a-bushel-basket” philosophy—is often most readily satisfied by giving away relatively large sums of money. Money is news, and for some reason giving it away is close behind stealing it or losing it in making headlines. Moreover, cash donations are presumed to result from honest toil, a nationally revered symbol. They are also a complete package. They need involve no further effort; no tiresome and sometimes disillusioning investigation into how fruitfully the money was spent. It is no handicap, either, that cash finds eager acceptance.

Without in the least disparaging the importance of untrammelled bundles of money—appeals for cash charitable donations are today the No. 1 good neighbor headache—a few companies came to realize that often cash alone is not enough. The gift of a hospital wing involves serious fiscal problems of maintenance. Donating a $500,000 playground park to the city cuts off needed tax revenues. Even endowing a university lecture course raises questions of need, of its place in the curriculum and of future rising costs.

Thoughtful corporate leaders observed that the warm glow of community appreciation following monetary benefactions sometimes quickly fades. They also noted that one large public gift almost invariably attracted numerous if more modest requests from philanthropic enterprises which were poised to undertake virtually unlimited good works and needed only cash to set them off. Judging from the appeals, human misery was expansible and could accommodate itself to whatever growth—and profits—American industry could achieve. Obviously the time had come for enlightened management to take a hard look at corporate charity.

Those companies which undertook critical self-analysis discovered first of all that quick publicity was not the payoff. Unsupported, a few clippings attesting to generosity had but a transient effect on community neighbors. As often as not the reaction was, “So what? They've got plenty.”

Another discovery was that philanthropy is a specialty which calls for expert administration. A company successful in making soap or automobiles or refrigerators doesn't necessarily know about slum rehabilitation, public libraries, hospitals or the problems of instructing 70 fourth-graders with one classroom and one and a half teachers.

They confirmed an old and sometimes disputed axiom: money isn't everything. Executive capabilities, energy, imagination, specialized knowledge, as in cost controls, for example, might be worth far more to a charity than even a basketful of cash. To be good neighbors, big neighbors are learning the importance of giving of themselves before they can give wisely of their money.

Among the real leaders in the new neighborliness movement there has been a further change in concept. Considered corporate giving is now rarely dictated by an individual. Less and less are decisions rendered in the home office. More and more initiative is taken by the community plant manager. Within reasonable costs he can be as good a neighbor for his company as he is for himself.

An executive of a company planning to spend more than $1,000,000 on civic improvements described the new approach. “We do not regard this as a gift to the city,” he told community leaders, “but rather as a proper price for the benefits which will accrue to the company, its employees and its stockholders from the project.”

Such thinking led Ford Motor Company to make a separate gift to the affected college for every scholarship it awarded youngsters of Ford employees. Thus, too, Detroit Steel Corporation makes an annual four-year scholarship award in labor relations to deserving high school graduates, neighbors of its plant in Portsmouth, Ohio. Not long ago such an award would have been unthinkable.

A few industrial leaders were among the first to recognize the growing crisis in education. They saw that the problem would become as broad as the country itself; that enormous population shifts would often compound the pressure of the bountiful baby crop and that resistance to increased taxes would frustrate efforts to provide adequate facilities. Then some of them were suddenly confronted with the great post-war scientist-engineer drought.

It was serious because basic business progress begins in a laboratory. The laboratory technician may be a chemist, an engineer, a market analyst, a sales manager or a business systems coordinator; he is a specialist by training and experience. Students simply weren't getting essential academic background. The future of industry depended on a growing supply of trained and competent people. It was obviously in jeopardy. Business leaders quickly realized that perhaps the most enduring evidence of good neighborliness was to encourage improvement in education.

There were many ideas for meeting the problem. In California, for example, the huge Bank of America, an old hand at good neighborliness, has established achievement awards which in the past eleven years have been distributed to 23,000 winning high school students. Of these, 2,000 have won cash awards totaling $335,000. Virtually every high school in the state participates.

To encourage students with scientific interests, some 500 Junior Engineering Technical Society (JETS) clubs, with more than 15,000 members in nearly every state, are being aided by industry, among other sponsors, to undertake challenging projects. At Republic Aviation, on Long Island, youngsters are working on an electronic automobile that automatically will follow a light beam, and on a Big Ear, a device for picking up normal conversation from 100 feet away.

At Midland, Michigan, Dow Corning Corp. is operating exchange days with schools in nine surrounding counties. While 75 teachers spend a day at the plant an equal number of qualified company personnel takes over their classes and shows the students how classroom learning is used in industry. These exchange days are found in many parts of the country. Business-Industry-Education days, in which education takes a quick but rewarding look at industry and vice versa, have now been featured in hundreds of communities.

In Monroe, Louisiana, Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp. gave the school board $10,000 to try out an outstanding scientific teacher on the faculty and reports great success. Hughes Aircraft sends out teams to make classroom scientific demonstrations and lectures, as does the Convair Division of General Dynamics. General Motors has long sponsored traveling science shows which have sparked the interest of hundreds of thousands of young adults.

Programs such as these are making a deep scratch on the surface of the fundamental problem but only on the surface. They arouse the interest of students, of course, but this can boomerang. If there is no available outlet for that interest; if there is no satisfying follow-up provided by school or industry, it may fade away and become much more difficult to revive. Nevertheless, there are hidden values not readily apparent. One is a subtle effect on both industrialists and educators. Working together, they gain mutual respect. Suspicions that businessmen are materialists or that educators are impractical dreamers are quickly allayed.

Most important, the outward success of these programs stimulates further effort. One midwestern company several years ago decided with some misgivings to open its plant to employee families and other neighbors. Some 18,000 guests showed up and happily devoured 39,372 hot dogs, 24,576 ice cream bars, and 44,420 soft drinks, while discovering how the factory worked. The president was so pleased with this response that his new good neighborliness soon included such diverse activities as all-cost nursing scholarships and aid to the city in annexing nearby unincorporated communities to meet serious tax problems.

Most stimulating are the programs aimed at deep penetration of the education problem. One of these, a model of its kind, recognizes that not every company can develop its own plan that is both unique and useful. This is the Merit Scholarship Program begun with a Ford Foundation grant in 1955 and now subscribed to by some 90 companies. It provides four-year stipends to students, supplemented by grants to the colleges they attend. This year more than 500,000 students will compete. It is noteworthy that the donor company receives virtually no publicity for its contribution.

While Merit Scholarships spread good neighborliness over the whole country, General Foods Corporation is starting a promising program in plant communities which enables local high schools to select qualified teachers for special summer training. Towns like Caribou, Maine; Waseca, Minnesota; and San Leandro, California, are now getting upgraded teachers in such subjects as education, history and state politics and highly important remedial reading.

Few big neighbors have been more acutely aware of the need for grass roots training to meet future demands for scientific personnel than General Electric, which strives to be a good neighbor in 140 communities. GE today employs 34,000 graduates of 790 colleges and is confident that this figure will increase steadily and substantially.

GE decided to establish summer fellowships for high school teachers and in 1945 brought together the first group of 50 chemistry, math and physics instructors for an intensive six weeks' course at Union College in Schenectady. This year seven universities are participating and the company contribution has risen to $350,000. Intensive classroom work is dramatized by extensive use of regular factory operations as a practical laboratory.

The effect on participating teachers—and through them on their pupils—is immediate and rewarding. By survey, some 95 per cent have reacted favorably, ranging in degree from appreciation to outright enthusiasm. Two-thirds of them subsequently received special honors, salary advances or promotions. Overwhelmingly, they agree the courses make school work more interesting to the students. A mournful but indicative complaint was expressed by one participating school: "The program was so valuable our faculty member was hired by a larger school system for more money."

Occasionally, education presents an unusual opportunity for good neighborliness. When Michigan State University decided to open an entirely new campus in Oakland County, near Detroit, James C. Zeder, Vice President of Chrysler Corp., saw his chance. As President of Chrysler's Institute of Engineering, he had been named chairman of the curriculum committee for the brand new college. Serving with him were a diverse group of laymen, including the head of an advertising agency, a circuit judge, a newspaper publisher, a labor leader, and an Air Force Major General.

Zeder and his committee decided to invite to Detroit leaders in four major phases of education. Each group would conduct a panel aimed at answers to such questions as, "What would I teach in a brand new college with no traditions, inhibitions or strictures?"

Picking up his telephone last summer, Zeder called, among others, C. Richard Soderberg, Engineering Dean, Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Henry T. Heald, President, Ford Foundation; Theodore V. Houser, Chairman, Sears-Roebuck; Milton S. Eisenhower, President, Johns Hopkins; Henry R. Luce, Time, Inc., and Sarah G. Blanding, President, Vassar College. He asked them to participate in Saturday discussions devoted to engineering, business administration, liberal arts and teaching and education.

When final decisions on the curriculum are made Zeder and his committee are confident that MSU (Oakland) will offer its community courses enriched by some of the country's most advanced thinkers.

But the program which may prove to combine most effectively the unlimited education opportunities with good neighborliness was sparked by American Iron and Steel Institute and Armco Steel Corp. It was designed to use the community itself as a facility for teaching. That is why Middletown, Ohio, where it started in 1952, has been called "The Town That Became a Classroom."

To find out what teachers wanted, Steel Institute's public relations counsel asked questions and got answers from some 5,000 educators. Overwhelmingly they said appropriate industry materials could be useful. What they wanted ranged from industrial field trips to work on school problems with civic groups. (Least desired was the long-outmoded essay contest.) The study, perhaps the most comprehensive ever made, pointed time and time again to education needs which could be filled within the school's own community. As a pilot project, the Steel Institute and Armco decided to aid a summer community-resources workshop in Armco's Butler County, in cooperation with Miami University in nearby Oxford.

For six weeks, 29 teachers searched the surrounding community for facilities to make education more meaningful. The result: a handbook of local resources and completely new teaching skills and techniques. As one of them summed it up: "The workshop awakened me to the vast resources available in my hometown." Said another: "Industry worked out materials with teachers instead of for them."

The enthusiasm of participants for the first workshop quickly infected other business and industry in Butler County. It was something everybody should get behind, civic leaders said. They did. Middletown's Industrial Council decided to sponsor the effort. The small grocer and druggist became as much a part of the workshop as the union leader, the school principal and the industrialist. Now a Junior Workshop is started and elementary school students spend summer days swarming around Middletown, descending on mills and factories, the newspaper plant and the city hall, asking questions and learning what makes the community tick.

Because the idea "causes the pupils to catch fire and the teachers to glow" and because it is inexpensive—about $5,000 for a six-weeks workshop for 30 teachers—it was bound to spread. It has. This year Community Workshops will be conducted in 22 areas, including Canada and Mexico. They will give new dimensions to the classrooms of tens of thousands of students who will find their once dull textbooks, as one pedagogue said, "charged with life and meaning."

This is what happened when a big neighbor wanted to be a good neighbor in the cities where it made steel.

A most comprehensive, promising, and quite different good neighbor effort is being pioneered by General Electric in developing a better business climate for industry. This sounds vague and abstruse. It is as practical as a toothbrush. It is simply the creation of a community atmosphere in which well managed business can profitably produce fairly priced useful products for its customers and productive jobs at commensurate wages for its employees.

A better business climate attracts and holds business and industry. This means community prosperity. Money can't buy it. It doesn't just happen. It has to be planned, worked for and earned. Without it communities invite slow, crumbling decay. They can't grow. They won't stand still. All they can do is fall back.

Many stagnant areas over the country are falling back. After a century a carpet factory moves away. An air conditioning plant and an elevator factory pull out. A file company shifts its manufacturing to other plants and reluctantly yanks the economic props out from under 620 employees and their families. The taxes these companies once paid now must be met by others. The stores which served their employees must find new customers or face hardship or bankruptcy.

Why do companies move? Usually because they can't stay where they are and stay in business.

All this is important, says GE, if only because industrial jobs mean dollars. A U. S. Chamber of Commerce study shows 100 industrial jobs in a community can create:

- 74 additional jobs
- 112 more households
- 4 more retail stores
- $590,000 more annual personal income
- $360,000 more annual retail sales

Take away 100 jobs and the picture is reversed.

What makes for a better business climate? The elements are simple:

1. Citizen understanding of and participation in civic and business problems.
2. Honest and efficient government through alert and informed voters.
3. Good transportation, hotel, shopping, bank, and hospital facilities.
4. A social and cultural atmosphere which will attract professional employees.
5. Qualified people developed in a sound education system to fill employment needs.

There are others such as a fair press, non-discriminatory taxes, constructive union leadership. In other words, favorable climate is created.

The problems of business climate are being thrashed out in Los Angeles and in Louisville; in Mattoon, Illinois, and Glens Falls, New York. General Telephone, with 48,000 employees, is sparking a do-it-yourself better climate effort among its member companies. In its plants Ford Motor Company is adding a better local business climate to the community responsibilities of managers.

There are many ways in which big neighbors can be good neighbors. And they will become even better neighbors in the future. But they will be the best neighbors in those communities where business—all business—is encouraged to develop, to expand, to provide more and better jobs for more and more people. These are the places where the community is a good neighbor, too. • •

Rod and Gun

Jules P. Cuenin, and many others whose names have slipped my memory.

I met Myron in San Francisco and we got to Monte Rio late in the afternoon. Bill Schaadt was painting a sign. He left bucket and brush hanging in mid-air, threw his waders over his shoulder, grabbed his rod, and we went fishing. I didn't catch anything that evening, which probably was just as well. Anticipation grows keener as the goal appears more difficult.

Despite the fact that I caught no shad, I learned quite a bit about fishing for them. To begin with, they are like steelhead in the respect that they don't lie just anywhere—or if they do, you can't catch them in some kinds of water.

They seem to prefer moderately deep and moderately swift water—not the deepest and not the fastest, but a good, strong flow from three to six feet deep is to their liking. They lie in the channel, near the bottom, like steelhead.

In fact, there is even a marked similarity in fishing for these two, totally different, anadromous fish, and all the shad anglers I met on the Russian River were using their steelhead tackle. This consisted of a fly rod capable of long casts, usually a powerful nine-footer, and a sinking line.

You cast across the channel, usually straight across or angling slightly upstream, and let the line sink as it drifts down. When it has passed you and begun to tighten, in the meantime sinking several feet, you begin to work your fly by jerking the line.

In this one respect, shad fishing is different. Steelhead are often caught on a fly that has no motion whatever except that imparted to it by the current; Shad never seem to hit unless the fly is darting erratically. Each angler had worked out his own system for giving his fly the required action. Bill Schaadt jerked his line steadily, using quick, sharp, four-inch pulls, one after the other. Howard George gave his line three sharp, short jerks followed by a slower, steady pull that took in about a foot of line. After each series of movements, of course, they both let the current pull out the line again.

The strike of a shad is—but wait! Bill, Myron and I went out to the river again next morning, to a place called Fyfe Creek. The sun was just warming the lovely California hills, and the mist was still rising from the water. I waded in until I could cast across the current, which was heavier toward the far shore.

I stripped out line and made a cast and jerked the line to start it sinking. It swung down, sinking as it went. I pulled the slack out, held the rod low and started jerking the line with my left hand. I had jerked it maybe 40 or 50 times—Bill Schaadt says you can tell a shad fisherman as far as you can see him because his left hand jerks all the time, automatically—and the line was swinging rapidly toward my side of the current. When it reached the slack water there, of course, I would have to strip in and cast again.

Suddenly, it was jerked out of my fingers. It felt as though a colt had hit the end of it, running full speed the other way. I grabbed it and quickly raised the rod to strike, but that was probably unnecessary. The shad undoubtedly set the hook.

In seconds, all of the loose line trailing away downstream had hissed up from the water and shot out through the guides, throwing off a spray of droplets he held briefly, rolled on the surface, and raced back down. He didn't take so much line this time. He was, no doubt, beginning to get tired. I knew he was getting tired because he had already resisted longer than any four- or five-pound fish has any right to.

Suddenly, he jumped. After all that, he jumped again! Spent fish don't jump. So we started over and eventually I forced him, still protesting, toward the beach. I wouldn't say I led him. Leading implies compliance on the part of whatever is being led. The shad, by this time so tired that he could no longer hold himself upright, still struggled. Even when I slid him out of the water, his tail beat a tattoo on the sand.

This fight was typical, with few exceptions, of every shad we hooked. One in twenty-five, maybe, or one in fifty, didn't have any more spunk than a dishrag. I think perhaps these occasional fish had completed spawning—which, of course, is their reason for entering fresh water—and were exhausted.

There was only one bad thing about shad fishing as I found it on the Russian River: you only need one fly. Or, to be more accurate, you only need one pattern of fly. You use up about fifteen per day because you have to fish deep and, as all steelhead and shad anglers know, rocks and logs on the bottom have a way of reaching up and attaching themselves firmly to any fly that passes near.

When you start out in the morning to fish for trout you never know whether they will prefer this fly or that one or maybe something else. This adds to the uncertainty. You always change flies with keen anticipation, hoping that the new pattern will be exactly what they want, and when you finally discover the right one you feel genuine satisfaction.

This is missing in shad fishing. You tie on the fly and start casting. If you don't get strikes it can mean only that the fish aren't there or else that they are present but aren't hitting at the moment. You can tie on a different fly if you want to, but you'll spend your time to better advantage if you lie down on the beach and go to sleep or else drive up- or downriver a few miles and try.

This standard fly, which Carl Ludemann is credited with originating, is tied on a No. 4 hook. First, a sparse red-hackle tail is attached, then the shank is wrapped with lead wire to give it weight. Oval silver tinsel is wrapped over the lead, which is held in place and tapered at the rear with tying thread. Next, two, and only two, turns of white hackle are taken at the front of the silver body. Finally, a small ball of red chenille is made behind the eye of the hook (see page 8).

While I was there, fully 95 per cent of the shad caught were hooked on this that sparkled in the morning sun. My reel began to sing the sweetest song known to an angler.

The shad ripped off 50 feet of line, then threw itself into the air. It jumped again and again, twisting and shaking. It acted like a five-pound tarpon.

When it finally discovered that it wasn't too slick to stay in the water after all, it bored back into the current and hung there, its silvery, flat side no doubt turned to take full advantage of the sweeping current. I put the butt of the deeply bent rod against my belly and held. I held as hard as I thought prudent, and that is pretty hard with a steelhead rod and six-pound test tippet, while the line sang in the water and the shad hung tight.

Eventually, of course, he had to move. He worked his way back upstream, passed me, and continued into the riffle at the head of the pool, fighting both the rod and the river. There one fly. Occasionally, somebody would try something else, usually a small buck-tail with silver body and some red and white or yellow showing, and occasionally one of these flies took a fish. There was never a time, however, when we couldn't hook as many or more on the Ludemann Shad Fly. And not once did we succeed in taking shad on another pattern when they refused the standard.

Strangely, fly fishing was far and away the best method to hook these Russian River shad. I say strangely because in the East, where I haven't fished for them, everybody seems to agree that lures are better. Even so redoubtable a fly fisherman as Joe Brooks reports in his book, Salt Water Fly Fishing (Putnam, $3.50): "Shad will hit small buck-tails and spinner-bucktail combinations now and then. They hit the small, scantily tied Connecticut shad fly hard and often. But for consistent strikes, no other lure seems to have the same appeal for shad as does the 00 Huntington Drone, the Metalure, and Trix-Oreno. Shad definitely go for spoon-type lures."

One day on the Russian River near Healdsburg, Myron Gregory, Boots Rogers and I had caught shad until we were exhausted and we were lying on the bank, resting for another session, when a fellow stopped his car beside the road and walked down to talk to us. It developed that he was a tackle salesman. He had a spinning outfit and enough lures to decorate all the Christmas trees in Sonoma County. He wanted to catch a shad.

We told him where they were and sicked him on. He fished a dozen small, glittering lures through the water where the shad were lying and didn't get a touch. He fished deep and shallow, slow and fast, with jerks and without. Then Boots tied one of the Ludemann flies to the end of his line and attached a quarter-ounce weight two feet above so he could cast it. Still, not a single shad rewarded him.

By this time, we were beginning to wonder if they had moved away or quit striking. Myron, Boots and I picked up our rods, separated by fifty feet, and laid out casts. Almost within seconds, we all three had shad on.

When Boots and Myron beached theirs to remove the fly and turn them loose—I released mine at thirty yards—the salesman looked carefully at the lovely fish. Then he said, more or less to himself, "That's bad!"

Myron glanced up in surprise. "What's bad?" he asked.

"Why," said the salesman, glancing ruefully at his box of lures, "shad are bad. I've got to sell this stuff."

"It's a good thing," he added, as he gathered up gear and started toward his car, "the others are not so bad as shad." Then, looking back over his shoulder with a broad grin as he walked away, "I'll bet I have a fly rod along the next time I come by here!" ● ●

Fastest Growing Sport

millions of boats, and millions of Americans gone plumb boat crazy.

$2,085,000,000 were spent over the retail counter on pleasure boating last year. Petroleum companies poured 404,057,000 gallons of gasoline into pleasure boats during the year. The lumber industry supplied 171,000,000 square feet of sheet plywood to boat builders during the 12-month period. 47,000,000 pounds of aluminum and 36,900,000 pounds of fiberglass went into boats in 1958, and 10,435,000 gallons of paint and varnish were sold to boat owners and builders. Outboard motor manufacturers sold 545,000 new motors in 1958, bringing the total number of outboards in the country to over 5,525,000.

The figures are quoted from a joint report on boating by the National Association of Engine and Boat Manufacturers and the Outboard Boating Club of America.

One wonders who these 37 million people are, with 2 billion dollars to spend on boating. A like number never before existed in the history of the world. A few, of course, are wealthy yachtsmen who could afford to pay a million dollars or so for revival of America's Cup competition last year in expensive 12-Meter racing sloops. Many are professional and managerial people of comfortable means who own 2,000,000 boats. But the great majority of boatmen whose money keeps builders busy turning out new models are citizens with modest incomes, classes of people who a generation ago wouldn't have dreamed of boat ownership.

According to a factual survey by the statistical research firm of Sindlinger, Inc., for Popular Boating magazine, most boatmen today are "clerical, sales and kindred personnel, craftsmen, foremen, vehicle and machine operators, laborers, service employees, domestics, students and housewives." (8,839,000 non-working housewives were reported to be actively interested in boating. That's more than the present number of boats in existence in the United States. If the "power of a woman," which we are continually reminded "never to underestimate" means anything—then the boom in boating is likely to continue.)

Individual annual incomes of $5,000 to $10,000 provided most of the $2,085,000,000 in last year's boating till. And the typical outboard-powered runabout owned by the typical boatman today is 14 feet long, trailered once a week 15 to 30 miles to water, used for fishing, skiing and family cruising, costs from $500 to $1,500 (including motor), and is better cared for than either the owner's house or car.

Why is this? What is this yen for getting afloat? There are millions and millions of amateur sailors; and the cities can't hold them, the highways can't transport them far enough from everyday realities, the plains can't compete with the call of the water world.

There's something for everyone to do in a boat. Dad can fish or mess around with his tool-kit or practice navigation. Sis and Junior can steer and water ski. Mom may not give a hoot about tying sailor knots, but she can watch over her entire brood aboard the family flagship where even cooking and dishwashing are adventures Dad and the kids enjoy.

Of course, there are other reasons for the boom: the "40-hour week" and increased leisure time; credit buying in a period of material prosperity; need for outdoor activity for the whole family.

Increased numbers of facilities and lakes from dam construction have also provided people with new means to get afloat. At this very moment a lake is building behind the giant Oahe Dam in North Dakota which will be longer than Lake Ontario and deeper than Lake Erie. It will water another 2,500-mile shoreline of reason for boating.

Fact is, the mere presence of water is reason enough for most people to get into boating. The problem is not why, but how. And the prospective boat owner might well begin by asking about his credit at a local bank, where 15 per cent of the present boating population bought new craft and 30 per cent of the hopefuls like himself plan to finance the purchase of theirs.

From this point in approach to the problem of buying a boat, a man goes on to look over the market—perhaps going to one of the 35 or 40 boat shows held each year, dropping in on local dealers, writing to manufacturers and other authorities for information and advice. Probably he starts to read a boating magazine. They are the best means of communication in the field, and nearly all bring out a special "Boat Show" issue with listings of thousands of items from diesel yachts to paint pots.

What does the boat shopper find? He finds that he is confronted with the picture of approximately 250 boat builders in the country turning out over 2,000 different stock models on assembly line basis. There are wood planked boats and sheet plywood boats and molded plywood boats and fiber-glass boats, aluminum and steel and rubber and canvas boats. Boats galore!—each type with its special advantages.

Prices range from $200 to $2,000 for a new 14-foot runabout, plus another $225 for a 5½-horsepower motor, $340 for a 10-horsepower motor, $625 for a 35-horsepower motor, any one of which might be suitable for a 14-foot boat, depending on its type.

Second hand prices, if one is in the market for a used boat, depend more on the condition of the hull and equipment than age. But generally a boat in reasonably good shape will bring 30 per cent to 50 per cent of its new-boat price tag. Blue Book evaluation of used outboard motors averages 50 per cent of price when new for a one-year-old motor; 40 per cent for a 2-year-old motor; 30 per cent for a 3- or 4-year-old motor, and so on.

If it is a cruising boat the shopper wants, one with more space and living accommodations aboard, a new 18- to 22-foot outboard cruiser will cost between $1,500 and $3,000, fully equipped without power. Another $750 will buy one new 50-horsepower motor. About $1,000 is required to fit the boat with a 60-horsepower motor and accessories. A little more will permit twin 35's.

A trailer for the rig costs from $150 to $400, depending on the size of the boat and weight of the rig. Mooring fees at a club or marina vary from next to nothing to $10 per foot length of boat for the season (including water, electricity, refuse disposal, a watchman and other facilities).

Inboard-powered cruisers are somewhat more expensive than their outboard counterparts, but the 4-cycle engines use less gas and have other advantages, not the least of which is accessibility for repairs in a seaway. Outboards, on the other hand, by virtue of being hung over the stern, are easily raised if the boat goes aground in shallow water.

Sailboats, specialty craft, and the hundreds of odds-and-ends of equipment useful in a boat, are matters the prospective boatman should discuss with local dealers, his boating neighbors and friends. A look at the boats in prevalence on the waters he intends to frequent will give him an idea of his needs. Most new boat owners burden themselves with junk they later throw away. It would be more sensible to spend the money on Coast Guard approved fire extinguishers, a reliable compass, anchor, life jackets, and an insurance policy.

When considering the worthiness of such expenditures on a hobby or sport, the new boat owner is inclined to seek justification of his purchases. This is not as difficult as it would seem. How much money has been saved that would otherwise be spent in hotel bills and restaurant checks, vacationing with the whole family? How much more important is it to spend weekends together doing something everyone in the family can enjoy? How much more fun is it being skipper of one's own ship than being guest in the fanciest chateau? Is a boat worth it? "Ask the man who owns one."

JUNE ISSUE

Two articles of interest are scheduled to appear in the June issue of THE ELKS MAGAZINE. Our travel expert, Horace Sutton, will write an article on the attractions of Chicago, the city of the 1959 Grand Lodge Convention. There will also be an article by sportswriter Harold Rosenthal about the pennant prospects of the Pittsburgh Pirates in 1959.

But boating is not an absolute paradise. The boom has had its growing pains and the country still has a way to go before solving all of the problems of protecting 37,000,000 water-sportsmen from themselves and from each other's boating ignorance and enthusiasm (although recently, after considerable effort on the part of industry, government agencies, and boating clubs, important steps have been taken in the direction of sound, sensible legislation and practical training of individuals in boat handling and water safety).

Before World War II boating was largely confined to people who had grown up close to the water. They learned about boats and the water from experience and their fathers' example. After the war the picture changed rapidly. In 1947 there were 2,440,000 recreational boats in use. In 1952 there were 4,333,000. In 1956, 6,686,000. In 1957, 7,071,000. Most of these new boats were owned by people who benefited by the lessons of centuries of boat building only if they were lucky enough to buy their craft from responsible and capable builders. And as for knowledge of seamanship, navigation and water safety—they were shockingly lacking and gravely endangered themselves, their families and other boatmen each time they set out on the water.

Despite these facts, boating was safer, and still is, than driving a car on the highways—if lower insurance rates are an indication of risks involved. But boating accidents were increasing in frequency. Cases of needless loss of life arose on every hand. Boats with engine failure were washed over falls time and again, for lack of an anchor or pair of oars with which to clear the danger. Explosion and fire took boats and lives because of improper ventilation and faulty extinguishers. Inadequate legislation and safety regulations plus lack of means to enforce such laws as existed encouraged delinquency on the part of naturally lawless persons. Nearly everyone who has been out in a boat a few times has witnessed reckless driving. Collisions were all too frequent.

However—fortunately for all—much has been done and is being done to correct the situation.

Day after day training courses in boat handling, water safety and more detailed aspects of good seamanship are being administered free of charge by members of non-profit groups such as the United States Power Squadrons, the U. S. Coast Guard Auxiliary, the Boy Scouts of America, and individual boat clubs all over the country.

The U. S. Power Squadrons, with headquarters at 96 West Street, Englewood, N. J., is currently conducting 80,000 free courses throughout the nation. The U. S. Coast Guard Auxiliary, a civilian, volunteer branch of the Coast Guard with headquarters in Washington, D. C., is conducting 40,000 courses.

The National Association of Engine & Boat Manufacturers, 420 Lexington Ave., New York 17, N. Y., an industry-sponsored organization dedicated to improving the conditions of boat and equipment construction and promoting boating knowledge, publishes instructive literature for free distribution. So does the Outboard Boating Club of America, 307 North Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Ill., with such titles as "Outboard Handling", "How To Organize For More Fun On The Water", "Financing Outboard Equipment", and many more free booklets. Both organizations also publish a list of 16mm. films on boating and associated subjects, which are available on loan from sponsors who benefit from improved boating conditions.

Another important step in the direction of better boating was taken in the last session of Congress in Washington, with the passage of H.R. 11078, An Act To Promote Boating Safety, better known as the "Bonner Bill" after Congressman Herbert C. Bonner, Chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Now known as Public Law 85-911, it is the first major revision of the nation's boating laws in 18 years, and the first improvement of the boat registration system since 1918. The law provides for proper operation of water craft, and requires that "every undocumented vessel propelled by machinery of more than 10-horsepower . . . using the navigable waters of the United States . . . shall be numbered." Boats will be numbered by the States, according to a consistent overall system, or by the Federal government.

Specific safety requirements are set forth in the Act, and in a broader scope it spells out the need "to encourage uniformity of boating laws, rules, and regulations as among the States and the Federal Government to the fullest extent practicable, subject to reasonable exceptions arising out of local conditions."

By these means, boating will continue to boom and improve, keeping its place among the safest of sports. Sensible boatmen everywhere know that a sound respect for the other guy and for one's own responsibilities as skipper will solve the important problems of boating. Overcrowded facilities will be relieved by new facilities, and boats and equipment will continue to improve in quality.

And playing together, thusly, people will continue to learn better how to live together. The small town, over-the-back-fence neighborliness which tends to disappear in modern society is reborn amongst a fleet of boats tied up at the same dock, clustered in the same sheltering bay, harbored together against the sea outside the breakwater.

Fact is, many people who have taken to boating for relaxing vacations are retiring afloat—selling out ashore when they reach retirement and living afloat, spending summers in the North, winters in Florida and the Caribbean.

That's something to dream about. These people learned to dream, and they know what Herman Melville meant when he wrote of boating in "Moby Dick": "There is magic in it. Let the most absent-minded of men be plunged in his deepest reveries—stand that man on his legs, set his feet a-going, and he will infallibly lead you to water, if water there be in all that region . . . Yes, as everyone knows, meditation and water are wedded forever."

So likewise are many pleasures and rewards, from deep-sea sport fishing to water skiing, from lying in some quiet cove watching the moon come up on the water to shooting rapids in a canoe. Yes, wherever there is water, someone will be looking for it. For fun, or—like ancient seamen who symbolically emptied buckets of water over their heads to wash away the psychological stains of the shore—for retreat from the irrelevant paraphernalia of day-to-day living. For relaxation. Release from confinement. Introduction to horizons. ● ●

a mark on the ground. Woody the great reporter got him to tell the whole story and we read it in the paper that week. 'I was standing there hosing down Mr. Fletcher's Buick,' George said in the paper, 'when all of a sudden I heard the crack of the bat and I said to myself, that one is surely hit, and a second later the ball landed with a smack and took one skip-hop and flew into the garage. I marked the spot with my heel and carried the ball back to the field.'

Woody took pictures of the place where the ball had hit and had a picture of George and Mr. Reilly and Lenny's father all standing there holding the ball up in the air and grinning like three kids eating jellybeans.

Well it measured close to 480, although I personally don't believe it went that far. I believe that George was either mistaken or bribed, or that Mr. Baron cheated with the tape measure thing, or that maybe there was more wind than anybody figured. I told everybody that 480 was an awful lot and that there were a lot of big leaguers that couldn't even pole one that far, much less a mere sandlotter like Lenny. But my voice was just a murmur in the crowd you might say. The paper ran it all over the front page, all about Lenny Baron's colossal clout. Malarky like that. I don't know how they can get away with it.

Well, let me tell you something else. 420 and 480 are all right—but they don't mean a thing. I'll tell you why. Who did he hit them off? He hit them both off of Skinny Wilson who can't pitch baseball any better than your grandmother. I'll tell you this—he never hit anything like that off of old Henry Price, because I know how to pitch him. Anybody can hit a long ball today if the pitcher is second-rate. I told that to Lenny. I said: "You never hit one of those flying saucers off of me and you never will—because I know how to pitch you." But he's a wise guy, like his old man, and he just scoffed and said: "You get back in there then, Henry, and we'll put it to the test."

And believe me, the only reason Lenny hit those lucky ones was because I wasn't in there. I had a bad back which I had hurt helping my father carry ashes out of the cellar and it affected my natural motion, and so the skipper said Henry take it easy for a couple weeks, because I guess I'm too valuable for the club to take any chances with. But this business was too much. I told the skipper I was ready to pitch again, that I wanted to go against Lenny's club on Sunday and take some of the wind out of that boy's sails. Lenny's club and my club were just about the best in the county and so we played each other quite a bit. Once in a while we'd go into the next town to play somebody different or they'd come to us, but it was mostly against Lenny's team. The people never got tired of us though because there was a lot of rivalry, like between different drug stores and stuff like that; and another thing I have to admit was true was that a lot of people were hearing about Lenny the slugger and were coming out to see him hit one. One day I fanned fifteen of those beauties and Woody didn't even mention it. Not that I care though.

Anyway that Sunday it rained. I was really rarin' to go too. But it rained all day. So what do you think that phony Woody does, with no impossible home runs to write about? He rewrites the story, does the whole thing up again. Only this time he ignores 480 and says that the boy's legendary clout (get that—legendary—the boy hasn't even begun to shave yet) went almost 500 feet.

So with this kind of propaganda running in the paper for three weeks in a row something was bound to happen. And it sure did. Woody got a call at the paper on a Friday from a fellow who said he is a big league scout and wants to know who is this boy Baron. Well naturally Woody sold the scout a bill of goods, saying that every big league club is after the boy and that this fellow had better get down here for Sunday's game. The scout said he would be there.

So naturally in five minutes everybody in town knew about it—which I say is the wrong thing, because if a fellow knows that a big league scout is going to be there then he's just naturally going to tighten up a bit and maybe even get the apple. But here's Woody running up and down the street like a madman telling everybody that a big league scout is coming down to see Lenny Baron play on Sunday. Everybody in town acted like they were on the other side of sober. Nobody, not even Josh Pepper who is ninety-four, could remember a big league scout ever coming to town. I walked around and told everybody to be calm, that it didn't necessarily mean anything. But nobody listened to me, because after all who was I? Only the boy that was going to be pitching to Lenny Baron, that's all.

And what was the object of all this furor thinking about it? Well Lenny-boy was pretty cocky. I ran into him in the drug store on Saturday night. He was sitting in a booth with three girls (one of whom used to sit with me before the era of the 500 foot home run) and he was gassing off about what he was going to do tomorrow, which wasn't very sportsmanlike because after all I was going to be the pitcher.

"Lenny," I said, "you'd better get a good night's sleep because this isn't Skinny Wilson you're facing tomorrow."

"Oh no?" he said, standing up one of his eyebrows the way he does, which irritates the devil out of me.

"No," I said. "Henry Price is coming back. And if you'll check your scrapbook you'll note that I not only have your number but your whole pedigree,"—which I thought was pretty clever.

"You'd better pitch with shin guards and chest protector on, Henry," Lenny said and the girls giggled. They'll giggle at anything.

"You can't hit 'em if you can't see 'em," I said.

"Don't be choking up when that scout comes out," Lenny said.

"Choke up?" I said. "We'll see who chokes up."

"Yes," Lenny said, real cool. "We'll see."

"When that scout leaves here tomorrow," I said, "he won't even remember your name."

"We'll see," he said, playing it real cool for the girls, making it look as if I'm the one who's gassing off.

So the next morning everybody was down at the station waiting for the scout to come in. Mr. Baron was all dressed up, and Woody was there and coach Morgan from the school and just about every popcorn in town. I was down there too with the rest of the guys, but just for curiosity's sake. I wanted to see them all making saps out of themselves. I read about these scouts. They're real sharp customers. You can't snow them with talk or phony newspaper stories. You've got to produce.

So the train came in and I knew right away this fellow is the scout, but Woody and Mr. Baron ran up to some guy in a sport jacket and shook hands with him. The scout was a little guy, kind of seedy looking, but he had those shrewd little eyes that they all have. His name was Joe Bell, an ex-ballplayer who was up in the big time for a little while. When everybody was finally done shaking hands with the fellow in the sport jacket, Joe said to somebody: "Who is Mr. Woodfield?" Then Woody and Mr. Baron rushed over to him and took his hand and shook it up and down and back and forth like they were trying to get water out of him. I could tell right away that Joe didn't like this phony business, that the only way you could impress him was to produce. But try and tell that to Mr. Baron. He had Lenny there and made him shake hands with Joe. Joe looked him over with those little eyes and I had the feeling that Joe didn't like him.

"That's the boy who hits them five hundred feet," Woody said. Joe just nodded. He wasn't impressed.

So naturally Mr. Baron took Joe home with him for lunch and then drove him out to the field in his big limousine. Me and my father, we came out in our old crate. My father's okay. He comes out to see me pitch every time although he really doesn't care too much for the game. And when I chuck a good one he feels just as proud as Mr. Baron, except that he doesn't go wind-bagging all over town about it. I guess maybe it's because my father works for Lenny's and Lenny is supposed to be the only ballplayer in town.

I'll swear that the whole town was out there. Joe sat down right behind our bench and just before the game I went around and introduced myself. I figured that because I was pitching it was the polite thing to do.

"I'm Henry Price, Mr. Bell," I said. "I'm pitching for the Gaels."

"That's good, Henry," Joe said. He shook hands with me. He was a real swell guy.

Just before the game a guy came up in a sound truck—it must have been Woody's idea—and played a recording of the National Anthem, just like a big league game.

Then we started off. It wasn't that I had anything personal against Lenny or anything, but I said to myself that he wasn't going to pole any 500 foot home runs off of me. I felt it when I was warming up. I was real fast. You can feel that sometimes, even before you throw a ball, just by the way the ball feels in your hand, nice and light. And I always had a good curve, so I knew I was going to give Lenny-boy a good afternoon. Joe watched me warm up, too; I could catch him out of the corner of my eye. Naturally I didn't look straight at him like most of the guys were doing. That's bushleague. You don't get any contracts by waving your arms or yelling or running up and down in front of a guy. You got to produce.

The skipper of the other team put Lenny up second so he could get as many at bats as he could. He always batted fourth, although just between you and me I always thought there were a couple of other fellows on the club who were much better hitters than Lenny. But let them do it their way.

I got their leadoff man on a little grounder and then Lenny the Legend stepped in. I played it real cool. I let him wait because I knew he'd be anxious. Well he was. He knocked the dirt out of his spikes and dug in real fierce and pumped the bat and was pretty fidgety, but I just stared down at him real cool. I think Joe must have liked that. They call that poise, I think.

Well, like I said, I was real fast. I don't think I was ever any faster than that day. I was really pumping them, from way back, and throwing easy too. Lenny took three big swings and sat down. When I walked back to the bench at the end of the inning I could see Mr. Baron waving his hands and trying to explain to Joe how the whole thing had happened. Joe was nodding, business-like, and polite, too, like a guy cornered by a bathtub salesman.

"He takes a level swing," I heard Joe say.

"He's a little over-anxious," Lenny's father said. And Woody kept nodding up and down and saying something about the sun being at a certain level.

Well I don't know what they told Joe the next time, but I would love to

For many years, we have been predicting that a shortage of usable land in South Florida was imminent! And today the FACTS ARE BEARING OUT OUR PREDICTION! Greater Miami has expanded so rapidly in the past 10 years (the population estimated to double from 1958 to 1968) that a critical shortage now exists for residential and commercial land in Dade County, (Metropolitan Miami).

The surge in population and industry has pushed westward to a point where not only the western limits of Dade County, but also the neighboring counties of Collier and Monroe are destined to become part of this miraculous South Florida development.

61 of the nation's top financiers recently visited Miami and saw through their investment wise eyes why South Florida is possibly the hottest spot in the nation for growth.

The Miami Herald quoted several of these financiers including Alfred Mante, of the Smith-Barney Corp., who stated "It's Fantastic—there is no question about the future—it will be just tremendous!" and Robert S. Davis of the St. Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Co. stated, "you've just begun to tap the industrial possibilities."

We offer you this opportunity to invest in property which, in our sincere opinion, will bring you BIG PROFITS! This land is undeveloped with no roads at present, as speculative acreage should be—or else the price would be far higher. But it enjoys higher elevation than Miami Beach and many other famous South Florida areas; and has just become available to the limited income buyer in small tracts. Think of it! You can buy 5 Acres (title insurable) for only $37 land cost per lot (16 lots—75' x 135') and wait for future progress to push the value upward.

Looking Behind the Red 21st Congress

TO FIGHT an enemy effectively, one must know something of that enemy's plans and strategy. It is therefore of the utmost importance for free people everywhere to know what goes on at such meetings as the recent 21st Congress of the communists—today's greatest enemies of freedom. At that meeting two important facts were made clear: first, that communism's aim remains, implacably, world domination; and second, that party members and sympathizers in every nation, including our own, are helping to further this aim. A recapitulation of the Soviet conclave is contained in this month's excerpts from Freedom's Facts—monthly publication of the All-American Conference to Combat Communism. The Conference, which consists of fifty national organizations, including the B.P.O.E., publishes these facts to help guard our democracy.

An American Communist rose to his feet in Moscow, February 2, 1959, to praise the work of the Soviet Party's 21st Congress. This gesture—by U. S. Party National Committee member James E. Jackson—means more than might appear at first. Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev had just announced at the 21st Party Congress that Communists were now leading the Soviet Union to supremacy over the entire capitalist world, including the United States; and that Communists in all countries "had not and should not have any different views or different understandings of the struggle against imperialists and the exploiters" from those issued from Moscow.

So, in effect, U. S. Communist James E. Jackson was offering allegiance of U. S. Reds to the Communist Party of the Soviet Union run by Soviet Premier Khrushchev. No matter how you look at it, this confirms U. S. Communists' loyalty to a foreign regime.

The purpose of the 21st Party Congress was much more serious than has been reported by the American press. A reason is that much of what was said in Moscow in January was phrased in hard-to-understand Communist theoretical terms. In simple terms the 21st Party Congress was called to announce that the Soviet Union has entered a period of all-out building of Communism. This means that there will be many changes inside the Soviet Union. These will include: stepped-up efforts to educate "a new type of man" who can live under Communism; increased efforts to boost Soviet farm and factory production; and gradual change from distributing goods on a basis of the work a man does to a basis of the man's or woman's need.

Building Communism also means the defeat of capitalism everywhere in the world. Khrushchev made a special point that: "Only on condition that we outstrip the developed capitalist countries in production level and insure new and far higher productivity of labor than under capitalism will Communism be realized." This brings up to date Lenin's classic theory that Communism will conquer the world when it can outproduce capitalism. Furthermore, in Khrushchev's view, the Communist world already has caught up with the world capitalist system in per capita industrial output. The job of the new seven-year plan is "to tip the scales of world production in favor of the socialist system against the capitalist system." At the point where the scales begin to tip in the Communists' favor, Khrushchev figures Communism will be on the home stretch toward world victory.

Communists from all over the world who attended the 21st Party Congress came away with the conviction that soon the Communist banner "from each according to his ability and to each according to his need" will fly above the Soviet Union and the whole Communist camp, and that this banner will attract all the working people of the world to Communism. This, true Communists feel, will shatter capitalism. So, today, Communists are fully confident that the future of the world indisputably belongs to Communism.

Khrushchev has made this statement to his Party's Central Committee:

"We will leave the capitalist world far behind us. Our country will then win over the universe by giving its workers the highest living standard. Capitalism will fall like a dead branch from a tree."

This confidence will make it more difficult, rather than less difficult, to deal with Communists in the future. They will expect us to surrender to their self-proclaimed superiority. They will regard any opposition to their demands as incitement to war.

In the wake of the 21st Party Congress, you can now expect an upsurge in propaganda to surrender to Communist proposals, which will be aimed toward ultimate destruction of our independence and our way of life. Strong and determined people will be needed to win the day for freedom in such a contest.

have heard. I got Lenny on three curves this time. He was looking for the fast ball on the last one but I played his game and crossed him up with a curve across his knees on the inside that he didn't even swing at. He threw his bat about fifty feet in the air and believe me it was pretty quiet in the stands. I don't know what his father said that time, except that maybe his boy had a lot of form in taking a pitch.

I would like to mention that Lenny wasn't the only one who was seeing third strikes. By the sixth inning I had cut down nine of those beauties on strikes. But I wasn't showing off. Each time I walked back to the bench and I kept my eyes down, just like a pro. Once, though, I stole a glance at Lenny's father and Woody and they were sitting next to Joe like two hungry cocker spaniels.

Next time Lenny came up I could hear his father and Woody yelling for him to hit one. It was the first time I ever heard Mr. Baron root like that. And Woody, the phony, should have stood neutral. But I didn't care. It gave me more determination. I could tell that Lenny was guessing this time. You can tell when a hitter is guessing, the way he moves his feet around with every pitch. Joe must have saw it too and they don't like that in a hitter, guessing.

Well the boy guessed wrong. He fouled one off this time, straight up in the air that caught on the backstop. I was glad it did because I wanted to whiff him again. I got him with a beautiful pitch. I set him up with a fast ball right in close on the letters that he chopped at like somebody's grandmother. And then I fired this curve, a real honey. I can still see it bending and sweeping like a good curve ought to, cutting low over the outside corner. He swung all right—but he had been laying back for the fast ball, I could tell. He never stood a chance. He took that real pretty swing of his and missed by I swear a foot. He threw his bat into the ground and really glared when he went running by to the outfield.

And then what do you think began to happen? Mr. Baron, who I knew must really be fit to be lashed, started to pull rank. He went over, his face all white, and told my father that this is terrible, terrible, that what is happening is a disgrace to the town. My father knew right away what he wanted. I really can't blame my father. He works for Mr. Baron you know, and when a guy is paying you money you naturally feel a little funny with him. Not that Mr. Baron said it in so many words. But my father is no dope. Between innings he slipped down to the bench and whispered: "Henry, Mr. Baron is furious."

"I can imagine," I said with a chuckle.

"I don't know what'll happen if you strike Lenny out again."

"Well you just wait and see," I said,

"because it's going to happen once more."

"Henry," he said, quiet, just like that, a little scared.

I knew what it meant. It was outright blackmail. But my father had to work for Lenny's father the next morning.

"All right," I said. "I'll let him hit one."

"Mr. Baron said it would be nice if you threw Lenny a slow one."

"It ain't right, Dad," I said.

"I know, son," my father said.

"But okay," I said because I didn't want to put my father in Dutch, he's a terrific guy. "Go back and tell that hypocrite that I'll give his son a slow one," I said. My father patted me on the shoulder and went away.

When I turned around I could see Mr. Baron sitting there all smug and ready. It was a real squeeze play.

WELL, now here's the kicker. I knew Lenny-boy was going to get a slow one, and my father knew it and Lenny's father and that great sportswriter Woody knew it. But I guess us schemers forgot to tell Homerun Lenny about it when he came up in the ninth. He was really glaring through his teeth this time too. As usual I whipped two quick ones right by the boy—just to show them that I could do it if I wanted—and then I stepped back and looked over at Mr. Baron and my father in the stands. They were leaning forward in their seats, waiting for the big 1000 foot clout. I touched the peak of my cap to kind of tell them all right, that the fix was in.

But meanwhile there's Kid Lenny down at the plate, dug in almost to his knees, that bat set behind his ear like a cannon.

I took the big windup, gave him the big motion and brought my arm around fast, but was holding the ball back loose in my hand and let up at the last second and just eased it in there. You couldn't have asked for it to be any slower. I mean I kept my end of the deal. She was floating in there for the strike too. You should have seen good old Lenny's face. And that bat. That bat got the shakes. It started and it stopped. It went back while Lenny went forward. It came forward while Lenny was falling. It was pitiful. I mean it was pitiful. I don't think he ever did swing. He wound up flat on his face.

It wasn't my fault at all. I couldn't go up and hand it to him could I? I even looked over at Mr. Baron and my father and shrugged. They didn't shrug back though.

As soon as I cut down the last man Joe Bell came running out of the stands and grabbed my hand.

"Nice game, Henry," he said. "Very nice game."

Everybody was hitting me on the back and saying the same thing except Lenny's father and that phony Woody. And except my father too, who really didn't know what to do.

Anyway Joe was so impressed that he got me a thousand dollar bonus when I went up to the city to sign the contract. The money came in real handy too that winter while my father was looking for a job. • •

Getting Garden Furniture Ready For The Summer

WITH another season's use ahead of it, last year's garden furniture may need a check-up. Weather and stress can loosen rungs and rails, crack slats and legs, rot canvas and rope webbing. But though outdoor furniture is vulnerable to sun and rain, it is usually easy to repair.

When glue is used, it must of course be a waterproof type. The water-mixed plastic-resin kind will do; the resorcinol type made for marine use is even better. Be sure to mix either according to directions on the container, and to put the work in a warm room (at 70 degrees minimum) while the glue is setting.

Copper tacks, copper or aluminum nails, and zinc-coated, aluminum or brass wood screws are worth their extra cost for outdoor repairs. Not only will they last longer than iron and steel fastenings, but they will spare the surrounding wood from deterioration. A rusty bolt or bracket, on the other hand, speeds decay by holding dampness near the wood, and a rusted pivot bolt rapidly wears the wood in which it works.

TO TIGHTEN LOOSE JOINTS in wooden parts, see first whether they can be taken apart easily. There may be a nail or screw still holding them. If it can be removed, do so. If not, work glue into the joint with a bit of wire and drive another nail, or better still a screw, where it will reinforce the joint.

Disassembling the parts will make it easier to apply glue properly. Slight looseness where a rung fits into its socket can be taken up with a cloth patch. Simply place a glue-soaked disk of cloth over the end of the rung. After pushing the rung in, trim off any cloth that shows. A loose rung or rail may also be slotted with a saw as in Figure 1, glued into its socket, and then spread with a wooden wedge, also glued in. Cut the slot so that the wedging effect will be along the grain of the socket as shown, not across it.

Rectangular tenons can be wedged in the same way, or more simply by inserting thin slips of wood between them and the walls of the mortises (sockets).

USE METAL REINFORCEMENTS where space permits. A flat right-angle bracket (A in Figure 2) may be mounted on one or both sides of heavy frame joints. Ordinary angle irons, which come in several sizes, are used inside corners as at B. On smaller members or for a neater appearance, the stamped bracket at C is preferable. Protect iron brackets by painting them, preferably before installation. Use only rust-resistant screws—never nails—to attach them.

A split slat or rung not subject to great strain may simply be glued together. Draw the split shut with a temporary binding of soft cord or rubber-covered wire as in Figure 3. Drive in wedges or simply twist the cord in order to tighten it.

Splits that will be under strain, like the chair member shown in Figure 4, require reinforcement. Work in glue with a fine wire, squeeze the split together with a C-clamp, and drill for a wood screw as shown. Once the screw is in tight, the clamp can be removed and the split won't open.

So badly broken as to be unrepairable, the plywood slat in this folding chair was removed by drilling out the hollow-head rivets that held it. A thin strip of wood from the side of a fruit box was ripped to slat width but left extra long. Steamed in front of a kettle for 10 minutes, it was sprung into a curve between two blocks nailed to a board and left overnight. Then it was clamped to the chair back, fastened with two screws at each end, and cut to length.

REPLACING BROKEN MEMBERS, or those so badly split or rotted as to be beyond patching, is less difficult than it may seem. Such parts must of course be removed, and this may be the hardest part of the job. If rusty bolts defy loosening, apply penetrating oil to the stubborn nuts. In hopeless cases, hacksaw through the bolt shanks or chisel the nuts off. Use the defective piece as a pattern for cutting an identical one from good lumber.

If only the end is rotted, which is common, you might consider bolting on side pieces as shown in Figure 5. They should extend well up to sound wood;

Figures 1 and 2

Figures 3 and 4

the upper ends should be sloped in order to shed water.

A new section can be spliced on in place of a damaged end as shown in Figure 6. Clamp a piece of wood of matching thickness and width alongside the member. Saw through new and old pieces simultaneously at a slope. Glue and screw on the new piece and trim it to length.

Broken rungs and rails can be glued and strengthened with nails, screws, or a wrapping of brass wire tacked fast at both ends. For new pieces, use hardwood doweling of the same size or slightly larger than the old. The ends can be whittled or shaped with a rasp to fit into the sockets.

Damaged plywood parts should be replaced with new ones cut from exterior grade plywood. Thin solid lumber from fruit boxes can also be used. Bent shapes are rather difficult to form satisfactorily, but one way is to hold the piece in front of a kettle spout until steam has penetrated the wood fibers enough to permit bending.

The framework of rattan furniture can be repaired by the same methods once the rattan covering has been carefully unwound. Apply glue before wrapping the rattan back on. Hold the end of it with tape or cord until the glue hardens, or insert the end under a previous turn and pull it tight.

Damaged slat, reed and cane seats are difficult to repair. But it is easy to buy a replacement seat or to cut one from hard composition board or the perforated kind. Fasten it with upholstery nails over the damaged seat.

SPLIT WOODEN WHEELS on lounges and other heavy pieces are often beyond repair. New ones can be cut from thick boards, but a better way is to glue together two thicknesses with their grain at right angles. Without a power saw, cutting out a thick wheel is slow work. One way to do it is to cut the

After cutting the hook off one, tape it and two others together tightly at the neck and both ends. Tape the doubled hook together or slip a bit of rubber tubing over the two wires. corners off with a straight saw, and then use a rasp to shape it.

Rubber-tired metal wheels from old toys or garden implements, or new replacement wheels of that kind, make excellent substitutes.

REMOVING HARDWARE such as the brackets and pivot pins used in folding furniture calls for a few metal-working tools. To get out riveted pins, file off hammered end (A in Figure 7) or drill out hollow spread ends (B). Then drive out the pin with a thick nail or a small punch. Replacements for damaged brackets are not easy to find, but you may be able to saw and file one out of a flat mending plate, angle bracket, or plain sheet steel.

Aluminum rivets up to 3/16" diameter are now available. For larger pins, obtain long stove bolts and saw off the threaded ends. Always put close-fitting washers on before hammering the ends over, especially when using such fasteners on wooden parts.

TUBULAR FURNITURE sometimes breaks where holes have been drilled for joining parts. Whole new pieces can be shaped from aluminum tubing or the light steel tubing called conduit that is used by electricians. An electrical shop may be willing to make a duplicate if you bring in the original as a pattern.

or file a piece of dowel to a tight drive fit in both sections. Assemble the two pieces with the dowel inside, drill through the tubing to insert one or more wood screws on each side, and run any necessary holes for bolts or pivot pins through the dowel.

Stretched coil springs of the kind shown in Figure 9 are best replaced. But if only the hooked end has pulled open, such springs will serve for a time if these ends are closed with pliers.

Worn canvas should be carefully removed so that it can be used as a pattern for cutting new material. Note the direction in which it is wrapped around the wooden members; the overlap of the material usually hides the tacks. Fold the edge of the new piece over like a hem and tack through this double thickness. To replace rope webbing, use plastic coated clothesline. Such line resists weather, stays white and is easily cleaned.

ROBERT SOUTH BARRETT

With the death of Past Grand Exalted Ruler Robert South Barrett there has been taken a most devoted Elk, a prideful, loyal American, a great humanitarian.

AS AN ELK

Some years ago THE ELKS MAGAZINE published a memorandum by Brother Barrett bearing the title "Why I Wear An Elks Pin". It reads as follows:

"It is an emblem that tells the world that I am a member of a great Fraternity of a million American citizens who believe in God and in the destiny of the United States of America to bring happiness to its people and peace to the world. It is an emblem whose antlers are symbolic of the elk in the freedom of the forest and indicates that I too am free, free to worship God according to the dictates of my conscience, free to vote as I choose, free to speak as I choose. It is an emblem that tells that I believe in charity—the charity of kindly thoughts as well as of kindly deeds: a charity that feeds the hungry, heals the sick, straightens crippled limbs, opens blind eyes. "It is an emblem that declares my willingness to assist the youth of our land by education, guidance and protection in reaching its highest ideals.

"It is an emblem that protects womankind and is an assurance that neither harm nor tears will ever be brought to any good woman through fault of mine.

"It is an emblem that shows that I believe in brotherhood, that every man of every creed is my brother and that as I believe in the Fatherhood of God, so do I believe in the Brotherhood of Man.

"The emblem of my Fraternity! The emblem of my faith! An emblem of my country! God grant that I may always be faithful to all it represents."

AS AN AMERICAN

In another memorandum Brother Barrett, some years ago, indicated that he regarded "American citizen" as the proudest title in all the world. He referred to his Elks card as telling him that he was the peer of emperors and kings, the ruler of his own destiny, the maker of his own fortune, as telling him that he was a citizen of a land where democracy rules, where brotherhood prevails, where tolerance holds sway.

He said that it told him that he had joined with hundreds of thousands of other Americans in the pledging of allegiance to our country and its laws, in placing the American flag first in their hearts as loyal Americans and first upon their altars as loyal Elks.

AS A HUMANITARIAN

He was indeed one of America's great humanitarians. Largely because of his great interest in the underprivileged and his generosity, thousands of American boys and girls, victims of the cruel disease of cerebral palsy, children who, in many instances, were practically hidden by their parents because of their deformities, are now facing the world blessed with the power properly to use their physical equipment and ready to lead normal and useful lives.

For 25 years, following his mother who was one of the organizers of the institution, he served as president of that great beneficent organization, the Florence Crittenton Foundation, which has given guidance and protection to thousands of unmarried mothers practically devoid of other organizations to turn to for relief.

As an Elk, as an American, as a humanitarian Brother Barrett has left a great inspiration to all.

A More Insidious Youth Trap

In December, 1956, THE ELKS MAGAZINE ran an editorial calling attention to the campaign of the Russian communists for a "Festival" to be held in Moscow. This they referred to as "open to all youth irrespective of their convictions, race, religious beliefs or nationality". They stated that no political, philosophical, or other tendencies would prevail at the "Festival".

A limited number of American youth attended in spite of the fact that there was considerable publicity relative to the real nature of the organization and its supporters.

This year the communists have changed the location of the "Festival" to Vienna, the capital of a non-communist country.

This is a demonstration of the acuteness of the communists in their recent propaganda activities. Undoubtedly they expected that some of the opposition to their so-called world youth festival would be lessened if it were held outside of a communist country.

It is certain, however, that they are recognized for what they are by Roman Catholic groups of students and others from all over Austria who recently staged a mass demonstration in Vienna in protest against the "Festival".

The leader of the Conservative Party in Austria, Chancellor Charles Raal, stated that it was expected that the organization designed to protest the holding of a "Youth Festival" in Vienna would reach 30,000 students and others but these expectations were greatly exceeded and the number of marchers really amounted to more than 50,000.

It has been very surprising, disappointing and disturbing to learn from the press that some branch of the United States Government has unofficially encouraged the participation of American students in a so-called communist "Youth Festival" this summer.

It has not been disclosed what department of the United States Government is responsible for the program to encourage the young people of America to participate in the so-called "Youth Festival" but we are compelled to hold in higher regard the Catholics of Austria than such Americans as encourage the attendance of American youth at this so-called "Festival of Youth" where ever it may be held.

Over and over again — It's the same old story...

FINALLY A FORMULA THAT REALLY WORKS

"I was ashamed to always be so tired!"

ALWAYS felt simply "run down". People were thinking of me as a "spoil-sport". I didn't know why until my doctor explained why I felt "tired" ... why my vigor was slipping away ... why my wife and family were beginning to think of me as a worn-out man. He told me how a vitamin-mineral deficiency in my diet could rob me of the joys of living ... and suggested that I supplement my diet with pep-building vitamins and minerals.

Well, I put off doing anything about my condition — until one day I sent for a 30-day FREE supply of high-potency Vitasafe C. F. Capsules and began taking one Capsule a day. In a short time, I began to feel like a new man! My pep and vigor increased, I continued with the Vitasafe Plan—and I felt stronger, more energetic!

Today, no one thinks of me as a "worn-out old man". I've got pep and energy to burn, and I have fun like a fellow half my age! And you may fool! Why don't you take advantage of this sensational free offer to see for yourself whether you, too, can again feel peppy and full of life! Mail the postcard today and accept this no risk offer as I did.

Do You Wonder What Makes You

SO

DARN TIRED?

A dramatization posed by professional model.

I used to feel weak and run-down from the moment I woke up in the morning to the time I tumbled into bed at night. Believe me, doing a full day's work is hard enough even when you feel good. But trying to be a good worker, husband and father when you're "dead on your feet" would make any man a nervous wreck!

I found myself getting upset by almost everything. I was "touchy" at the office, cross and irritable with the children. I'd start arguments with my wife over the smallest things. I finally decided to see our doctor.

After examining me, the doctor explained that my tiredness and nervousness were due to a lack of important vitamins and minerals. To help correct my condition he recommended I take a good food supplement daily.

I sent away for a trial supply of Vitasafe High-Potency Capsules that I had seen advertised. In just a few weeks my energy came back, and now I feel like a new man! If you feel tired, nervous and miserable, why not send for your trial supply by mailing the postcard today?
